EXPLANATION

THE object in view in preparing Corpus Juris Secundum has been twofold: First, to provide a complete encyclopedic treatment of the whole body of the law, which means that it must be based upon all the reported cases; Second, to present each title of the law in form and content most suitable as a means of practical reference for the Bench and Bar.

Corpus Juris Secundum is therefore a complete restatement of the entire body of American Law. The clear-cut and exhaustive propositions comprising the text are supported by all the authorities from the earliest times to date. The supporting case citations, conspicuously set out in the notes, point to all decisions handed down since the publication of Corpus Juris. When the searcher may wish to consult earlier authorities, a specific reference to Corpus Juris makes available all cases back to 1658.

Each title is preceded by a complete section analysis, greatly simplified to facilitate research. Where the scope of any section is such as to require it, a more minute analysis is found thereunder in its appropriate place within the title (see Abatement and Revival, Section 112). The convenience of this method—an innovation in encyclopedic writing—must immediately commend itself.

A concise black-letter summary, indicative of its scope, precedes the full treatment or statement of the law under each section. These introductory summaries, concise and free from interlineation of authorities, have proven of great convenience and value in legal research.

An index is found in the back of each volume covering the titles contained therein, thus providing another convenient means of ready access to the text and notes.

Corpus Juris Secundum is kept to date by means of annual cumulative pocket parts for each volume. This feature of supplementation which has proved so successful in modern digests and statutes conveniently, and with certainty, keeps each title constantly to date through current cases and new precedents.

Corpus Juris Secundum represents the combined product of the highest editorial talent and manufacturing skill. Its many excellent editorial features are fittingly accompanied by corresponding innovations and improvements in mechanical arrangement, typography, and design, which the publisher believes will commend themselves to the profession as representing a new standard in legal publications.

XVIII. USE AND REGULATION OF PUBLIC PLACES, PROPERTY, AND WORKS

A. STREETS AND OTHER PUBLIC WAYS

1. IN GENERAL

§ 1653. Definitions and Distinctions

The term "street" is ordinarily used to mean a public way or road in a city or village.

In a general sense, a "street" is a way or a paved way or road;²³ it is a generic term and includes all urban ways which can be and are generally used for ordinary travel.²⁴ Ordinarily the term "street" is used to mean a public way or road in a city or village,²⁵ and is generally distinguished from public ways or roads outside thereof.²⁶ The term "street" does not include a private road,²⁷ or toll roads or turnpikes,²⁸ or other roads owned by a private corporation,²⁹ or a wharf³⁰ or a park,³¹ or an approach to a bridge.³² On the other hand, the term may in-

"Lot" and "street" distinguished

The term "lots" in its ordinary meaning includes that portion or part of territory measured and set apart for individual private use and occupancy while the term "streets" means that portion set apart and designated for use by the public and means a public way in a city, town, or village.

Term "street" in plat, map, town ordinance, contract, or deed must be taken as referring to street in true sense of public thoroughfare or highway in city or village.—Town of Refugio v. Strauch, Tex.Com.App., 29 S.W.2d 1041.

City street used as state highway

City streets continue to be such, even though designated by the state highway commission as streets over which a state highway shall be routed.—Cabell v. City of Cottage Grove, 130 P.2d 1013, 170 Or. 266.

Maintenance by state

A street within corporate limits of town does not lose its character as a "city street" by work done for its maintenance or its relocation by virtue of contract between municipality and state highway department.—Brimer v. Municipality of Jefferson City, Tenn., 216 S.W.2d 1.

Statutory definition

erty lines of every way or place of whatever nature when any part thereof is open to the use of the public, as a matter of right, for purposes of vehicular traffic."—Cihal v. Carver, 79 N.E.2d 82, 334 Ill.App. 234.

Street as highway see Highways § 1.

"Street" and "road" distinguished

The word "road" is a term of general use designating a passageway in the country outside of municipality, and word "street" is term of general use designating passageway in municipality.—Howard v. State, 49 S.E.2d 684, 77 Ga.App. 712.

Permissive use by public

The fact that a roadway, over which the public has a permissive use but which is maintained and controlled by someone other than the city, is within the corporate limits of city does not make it a street of the city.—Kroeger v. St. Louis County, Mo., 218 S.W.2d 118.

Form or structure. A street need not take any specific form of structure,⁴⁵ and, if its form and structure are such that it serves the purpose of a street, it is immaterial what its form may be or that it may also serve another purpose.⁴⁶

Subjection to public use. A street is a public way from side to side, and from end to end.⁴⁷ The question whether a way is public or private is determined by the right of the public to use it,⁴⁸ and not by its size⁴⁹ or the number of persons who may choose to exercise the right.⁵⁰ While a "street," in the ordinary acceptance of the term, contemplates a carriageway and a footway, a public way is, nevertheless, a street, although its use is confined to pedestrian travel only.⁵¹

Sidewalk; grass plots. The word "street," as ordinarily used, includes a sidewalk,⁵² although it is sometimes used in its restricted sense as including only the roadway.⁵³ Grass plots and park areas between the roadway and the sidewalk are part of the street.⁵⁴

Intersection means the space occupied by two streets at the point where they cross each other or the space common to both.⁵⁵

a city as distinct from a public street;⁵⁶ a narrow way smaller in size than a street.⁵⁷ It is a narrow street, passage, or way in common use for the special accommodation for the property it reaches; it is a right of way not meant primarily as a substitute for a street but to serve a limited neighborhood for local convenience and not for general passage or travel as in the case of streets.⁵⁸ It has been held that the term "alley" does not embrace streets,⁵⁹ that an alley is not a "street" in the proper sense of the term,⁶⁰ and that a private alley will never be so considered.⁶¹ It has also been held that an alley is not intended for general travel or passage like streets,⁶² and in many instances is not governed by the rules applicable thereto.⁶³ On the other hand, it has been held that the only difference between a street and an alley is in the width of the way⁶⁴ and that a public alley is a public street or highway and is governed by the rules applicable thereto.⁶⁵ The term "alley," when used in connection with streets and highways, means a public alley.⁶⁶

Boulevard. A boulevard is a street with added parklike features.⁶⁷ It has been held to be within the general description of a street or highway,⁶⁸ but it has also been held that a "boulevard" from its ancient signification is not synonymous with "street,"⁶⁹ and a charter provision may be construed with respect to this distinction.⁷⁰ Where the provisions of a statute relating to streets are totally inconsistent with provisions of a statute relating to boulevards, the fact that an ordinance of a municipality denominates the highway a "boulevard" does not make it such, nor does the fact that it denominates it a "street" make it a street.⁷¹ It has been held that the character of a way as a boulevard or ordinary street is to be determined by the governing authorities' intention and plans and the use to which the way has been put.⁷²

Although it has been held that a city council may not change the name of a street where no good cause exists therefor except on the petition of abutting property owners,⁷³ a municipal corporation having very general powers over the streets, including the authority to regulate and control the use thereof, and the specific power to name them, has the power to change the names or renumber the buildings by ordinance or resolution,⁷⁴ and this right is not exhausted by a previous exercise of the power.⁷⁵ It has been held that an ordinance changing the name of a street is a legislative act not subject to review by the courts,⁷⁶ but it has also been held that the exercise of the power is subject to judicial review where it is arbitrary, unreasonable, or unfair.⁷⁷ An attempt by the council to change the name of a street from a name by which it is sometimes called, instead of from its official name, does not affect the official name.⁷⁸ Where the name of a street becomes the official name by a resolution of the council, the subsequent recording of a map of a subdivision giving the street a different name is inoperative to change the official designation.⁷⁹ Where a street is designated by a name on a recorded map and the city thereafter accepts as public streets all streets dedicated as such, such designated name becomes the legal name of the street.⁸⁰

§ 1655. Use by Municipality for Purpose Other than Highway

A municipal corporation may use a street for any purpose not inconsistent with its use as a highway, but it may not appropriate the street for a use entirely inconsistent with street purposes.

A municipal corporation holds its streets in trust for the use of the general public, and is without power to convert them to any other use⁸¹ except as specifically authorized by the legislature.⁸² A municipality may not appropriate the street for any use entirely inconsistent with street purposes,⁸³ and hence it may not construct buildings in a street which materially interfere with its use as a highway,⁸⁴ such as a public or municipal market,⁸⁵ or a jail,⁸⁶ or, according to the decisions on the question, rent out a space along the curb to the obstruction of travel or of access to abutting property,⁸⁷ or erect a standpipe or water tank.⁸⁸ So a municipality has no right to erect on a street a permanent structure not aiding public travel and which injuriously affects the beneficial enjoyment of his premises by an abutter,⁸⁹ as in the case of public toilets⁹⁰ or an electric lighting plant.⁹¹

On the other hand, a municipality may use a street for any purpose not inconsistent with its use as a highway,⁹² and its rights are not limited to the mere surface of the street.⁹³ For instance, it may lawfully use the streets for the construction of sewers,⁹⁴ or for subways,⁹⁵ or for drainage;⁹⁶ or to erect fire alarm boxes, hydrants, and meter boxes;⁹⁷ or to lay gas or water pipes,⁹⁸ or conveyors for heat and power;⁹⁹ or to erect poles and wires for electric lights,¹ telephone service,² or other utilities;³ or to construct a wharf at the terminus of a street,⁴ or to devote a part thereof to bridge approaches;⁵ or to convert a promenade into wharves;⁶ or to set apart for a boulevard a portion of a street not devoted to business purposes.⁷ It has been held that a municipality may construct a flood wall on the street.⁸

While the discretion of the municipal officers in determining the use to be made of the street is not subject to the control of the courts except for the clearest abuse,⁹ injunction is the proper remedy

Park areas; grass plots; ornamentation. Where not needed for purposes of travel, a municipality may use part of the street for park or grass areas.¹¹ A portion of the street may be set aside for purposes of ornamentation,¹² but it has been held that a municipality may not appropriate a portion of a street for the ornamentation of the front of a public building.¹³ The erection of a suitable monument by a municipal corporation at a street intersection, so situated as not to interfere with the free and reasonable public use of the highway by the public, is not an unlawful invasion of the public highway.¹⁴

2. ESTABLISHMENT, EXISTENCE, AND LEGALITY

§ 1656. Establishment in General

The power and duty to establish streets are discussed supra § 1042, and the manner of establishment infra §§ 1657-1660.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 1657. Manner of Establishment

As a general rule, a street may be established as a public highway only by dedication, prescription, or statutory proceedings.

A street may be established as a public way by dedication, as discussed in Dedication § 8, prescription, as discussed infra § 1660, or by statutory proceedings, as discussed infra § 1659; and, as a general rule, a street may be established as a public way only in these ways,¹⁵ although it has been said that it is not necessary that the statutory course be pursued.¹⁶ While a direct ordinance is the usual and proper form for establishing a street,¹⁷ it may be effected indirectly by ordinance or resolution recognizing the dedication or existence of the street.¹⁸ The repeal of an ordinance vacating a street will not have the effect of reestablishing it.¹⁹

A street is usually not regarded as actually established until it is open for public use.²⁰ Where lands are dedicated for street purposes by a municipality with an assent thereto and release of all

Trees

City has right to maintain shade trees within prescribed areas in city streets.—Abraham v. Sioux City, 250 N.W. 461, 218 Iowa 1068.

Discretion

Where charter gave council control over streets, extent to which streets are opened for travel or used for parks rests entirely within discretion of council.—Plunkett v. City of Aiken, 156 S.E. 245, 159 S.C. 97.

Retention of character as public way

A municipality may set off part of a highway for a particular use, such as use for a parkway, without constituting an abandonment of portion of highway set apart, or without constituting a dedication thereof to an inconsistent purpose, and highway for its full width retains its character as a public way, subject to conversion into a driveway whenever, in the opinion of the constituted authorities, traffic conditions so require; and where city officially authorized creation of a parkway "in" street, and gave a name to the parkway developed "in" the street, and later board of aldermen directed removal of trees and shrubs "from" the street in preparation for paving, there was no dedication of the locus to use as a park as distinguished from a parkway, and therefore board of aldermen was authorized to pave the locus.—Spicer v. City of Goldsboro, 39 S.E.2d 526, 226 N.C. 557.

Restricted use or no use

Ways that have been worked and improved

Where a statute declares that all streets, roads, and alleys in a particular village which have been worked and improved by the trustees and are then used as such shall be public highways, the inquiry as to such ways is as to determining whether they come within the provisions of the statute and not as to whether the way has been established under the common-law or general statutory provisions.—*Hickok v. claims for damage by the owners, they make an existing street at least as between them, and one dealing with property so dedicated to street purposes, although not actually in public use, who recognizes the right to use such land for street purposes, may not thereafter in dealing with the same person repudiate the existence of the street.²¹ Where the ordinance under which a railroad company is granted a right of way through a city recognizes the existence of certain streets, the railroad company after accepting the privileges and benefits of the ordinance may not question the character of such streets as public ways.²²

Right of private owner. A lot owner may permit the use of a lot by the public as a street or dedicate it to such use without violating the rights of the owner of the adjacent lot.²³

§ 1658. — Adoption of Plan or Plat

Streets may be established with reference to a particular plat or plan.

While the legislature on the incorporation of a city may establish the public streets therein with reference to a particular plat or plan,²⁴ and by statute a plan filed on incorporation or on annexation of territory to the city may make the streets shown thereon public streets,²⁵ the mere fact that a street is shown on a map or plan of the city does not make it an actual street where it has not been opened as such.²⁶ This is true notwithstanding the city owns in fee simple the land designated in the plan as the place where the street is to be located.²⁷ By express provision of the statutes in some jurisdictions, whenever a city has been surveyed and a plat thereof has been filed showing the streets, such streets are public highways.²⁸ Where streets have been established by the proper authorities according to a plan, if they can be identified and drawn on the ground from the description in the record and the delineation on the plan taken together, the laying out of the way will not be void or vitiated by a misdescription.²⁹ The municipality may under the authority of the legislature change the plan, and thereby the extent, of the street.³⁰

§ 1659. — Statutory Proceedings

Statutes, which must be substantially complied with, sometimes provide for the establishment of streets by proceedings based on the consent of the property owners or a majority of them.

By provisions of the charter or other statutes, it is provided in many jurisdictions that streets may be established by municipal proceedings based generally on the consent of the property owners or a majority thereof manifested by petition or election,

No intent to establish streets

Under private statutes granting and amending charter of town, the legislature merely attempted to fix corporate limits of town and did not recognize that streets should be only as shown on a map which was registered when statutes were enacted and which described platted land which was included in the town.—Home Real Estate Loan & Insurance Co. v. Town of Carolina Beach, 7 S.E.2d 13, 216 N.C. 778.

Adoption of plan

(1) Borough plan prepared by surveyor at direction of council was not competent evidence to establish projection of street by municipality unless adopted by council.—Pittenger v. Borough of Wilson, 191 Pa.Super. 381.

(2) Approval by city planning board of plan for construction of street on private way, shown by recorded plan referred to in deeds of abutting lots, did not affect grantees' rights established by such deeds or confer any rights in such lots on corporation constructing street; grantees in deeds, conveying lots with right of way over street between them, were charged with notice that recorded plan, showing such street, was approved by city planning board and could properly assume that it was approved in accordance with statutes, but were not bound by hearsay testimony adduced before board or conditions orally imposed thereby before sanctioning plan.—Walker v. E. William & Merrill C. Nutting, 20 N.E.2d 441, 303 Mass. 535.

(3) Adoption or revision by city council of general map pursuant to statute did not divest landowner's title in bed of street as shown thereon, and did not obligate city to begin condemnation proceedings presently to acquire land in bed of street as shown on map, or compel city to open street shown thereon until council decided that it was actually needed.—Headley v. City of Rochester, 5 N.E.2d 198, 272 N.Y. 197.

Abandonment of rights

Where land lying adjacent to city was platted under statute providing plan for extension of system of streets, avenues, and alleys into unplatted territory, any right municipality acquired thereby was abandoned.—United Finance Corporation v. Royal Realty Corporation, 191 A. 31, 173 Md. 138.

or by other proceedings initiated by the municipality, and substantial compliance with the statutes is required to make the establishment valid,³¹ although the presumption is that the statute was complied with,³² and mere irregularities will not invalidate the proceedings.³³ A property owner who signs a petition to have a street laid out in front of his premises is not thereby estopped, as owner of that property or of property subsequently acquired, to question the legality of the proceeding.³⁴

Applicability and construction of statutes and ordinances. A city may not avail itself of a statute applicable to county roads only.³⁵ An ordinance, fixing the course and limits of the street, in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, will be construed as establishing it at once, and not as merely preparatory to its future establishment.³⁶ A statute referring to a street for the purpose of designating a boundary will not be construed as extending the street itself.³⁷ A statute establishing streets through a cemetery does not apply to streets not within such boundaries.³⁸

Effect of prior dedication. A dedication by the filing of a map will not prevent a city from proceeding under the method provided by statute for the establishment of a street over the lines of a proposed street as shown on the map.³⁹

Description and location. It is essential to the lawful location of a city street that its termini be definitely located,⁴⁰ and the proceeding is void where it does not definitely locate the street.⁴¹

Review. Under a statute giving the right of appeal only to a person "aggrieved," citizens and taxpayers of the city who show no special injury different from the public in general have no right to appeal from the laying out of a highway by the municipality.⁴²

§ 1660. — Prescription

A street or alley may be established by prescription.

(1) Municipality may not acquire land for street by prescription.—Town of Ruston v. Adams, 121 So. 661, 9 La.App. 618—44 C.J. p 886 note 60 [d].

(2) A municipality can acquire property for public use, such as streets, only by direct purchase, by expropriation, or by dedication to public use.—Brasseaux v. Ducote, La. App., 6 So.2d 769—Town of Pineville v. Ball, 119 So. 788, 10 La.App. 283.

more than forty years,⁴⁵ or for more than twenty-one years,⁴⁶ or for twenty years,⁴⁷ has been held sufficient, and a shorter period of time is sometimes fixed by statute.⁴⁸ So, user continuing for more than the time required by the statute of limitations to bar an action for possession of land may be sufficient.⁴⁹ Where the public generally has used land so as to acquire a prescriptive right to an easement against the owner, the city in which it is situated may assert the rights of the public thus acquired, without itself having asserted the right to the full period of prescription.⁵⁰

Under a statute providing that, whenever any road or portion thereof shall have been used and kept in repair and worked for a stated time continuously as a public highway, it shall be deemed a public road, something more than a mere use of land for public travel is required to set the statute running,⁵¹ and, under a statute providing that the road shall have been used "as a public highway," it has been held that the road must not only have been traveled on, but must be kept in repair or taken in charge and adopted by the public authorities.⁵² Further, a statute providing that title to a highway may not be acquired by use until so declared by the board of county commissioners has been held to evince a general legislative intent and to require an assumption of jurisdiction by definite action of the municipal authorities, notwithstanding streets are subject to the control of municipal authorities.⁵³

Character of user. The user must be under a claim of right,⁵⁴ with the actual or implied knowledge of the owner,⁵⁵ and it must be exclusive,⁵⁶ open,⁵⁷ notorious,⁵⁸ continuous,⁵⁹ uninterrupted,⁶⁰ undisputed,⁶¹ acquiesced in,⁶² and adverse.⁶³ Where the landowner retains dominion over the land, a mere permissive use under a license from him will not establish a prescriptive right thereto by the public.⁶⁴

public street by prescription, the use must be by the public;⁶⁵ the crossing of a lot to reach a private residence does not create a public street, but at most a private right of way.⁶⁶ However, it has been held that the use of land by the public generally and not merely by inhabitants of a municipality does not create a prescriptive right in the municipality.⁶⁷ To establish a way by user, the public must have pursued a definite, fixed course over it for the required period,⁶⁸ although the amount of the travel is not controlling.⁶⁹ The width of the way or the extent of the servitude is measured by the character of the user, for the easement cannot be broader than the user.⁷⁰

Acts of municipality. In order to establish a public street by prescription, the municipality must exercise control and authority over the street,⁷¹ although such conduct is not of itself sufficient to establish a street by prescription.⁷² While the rights of the public in a highway may not be admitted away by taxing officers, the fact that the land claimed as a street has been, at all times, listed as private property is significant, in connection with other facts, as affecting the question of adverse, exclusive, and uninterrupted public user.⁷³ Where a street has been established by prescription, the rights of the municipality may not thereafter be prejudiced by the issuance of building permits by the building inspector.⁷⁴

Statute barring transfer

Under local act providing that absolute control of half-mile track with park and buildings attached should never pass out of hands of mayor and council of city, the public could not by even general use by all kinds of traffic obtain a prescriptive right to use race track in city park as a public road.—*Barker v. § 1661. Highways in Territory Included by Incorporation or Annexation

As a general rule, a highway, on its inclusion by incorporation or annexation within the boundaries of a municipality, ipso facto becomes a street.

A public highway, on its inclusion by incorporation or annexation within municipal boundaries, generally becomes ipso facto a street and subject to municipal control,⁷⁵ and the municipal corporation takes it in its condition in fact and law existing at the time of its inclusion.⁷⁶ This rule has also been applied as to county roads.⁷⁷ A municipality whose limits include streets succeeds to the rights of the prior public agency having jurisdiction of the area.⁷⁸ Thus on annexation by a municipality, village or town streets become streets of the municipality.⁷⁹ However, the question whether a highway becomes a street when included within the corporate limits of the city has been held to depend on the intention of the legislature as gathered from the city charter, general laws, and the entire course of legislation on the subject,⁸⁰ and, further, it would seem to be within the power of the city to determine whether it will assume control over such highways;⁸¹ but where the charter of a city confers full control of all roads and highways or parts thereof within the corporate limits, and excepts them from the jurisdiction of the county, the city by acting under its charter accepts such relinquishment and grant as to the county roads within its territory and they ipso facto become streets.⁸²

A sidewalk may be established by resolution as well as by ordinance.

A sidewalk may be established by a resolution as well as by an ordinance.⁸³ Under a statute empowering the city to lay out, widen, and vacate streets and sidewalks, the city may regulate the width of sidewalks and abolish them if traffic warrants, unless some private rights protected by the constitution are impaired.⁸⁴

3. LOCATION AND EXTENT, AND ALTERATION OF COURSE OR WIDTH

§ 1663. Location and Extent

The rules with respect to locating boundaries generally apply in locating a street from a description in a map or plat.

In locating a street from a description in a map or plat, the rules with respect to locating boundaries generally have been applied.⁸⁵ For example, measurements will be taken from an existing and permanent monument rather than from an object subject to possible shifting and variation.⁸⁶ Fixed monuments, whether natural or artificial, control course and distance in ascertaining boundaries.⁸⁷ Where an original survey is shown to have been inaccurate, a street may not be located on it, where the monuments have been lost, by running from a known line of the survey.⁸⁸ Where a plat shows a street crossing other streets in a curve, the outside line of the street being continuous but the inner line

being broken into a series of angular spaces caused by the shortening of the rectangular blocks within the curve, such angular spaces form part of the street.⁸⁹

Practical location on the ground. While the boundaries of a lawfully platted street are to be located by the plat and not by the actual public use,⁹⁰ and the lines and boundaries of streets as between public and private owners cannot be established by acquiescence,⁹¹ nevertheless lines actually run and established on the ground will control mere distances indicated by the plat;⁹² and, where the original monuments cannot be ascertained, a practical location under, and in pursuance of, a plat will not be overcome by a discrepancy in distance.⁹³ Further, where the lines have been for a long time acquiesced in and recognized, they will not be changed by a resurvey merely to obtain mathematical exactness.⁹⁴ Where the center line of a street cannot at all points be located by bearings, and distances of survey and monuments are absent, the line may be determined by regarding also the location of the street as used by the public and the duration of such use.⁹⁵

Location of termini. It is essential to the lawful location of a city street that its termini be definitely located.⁹⁶

Width of roadway. A statute providing that in all streets of a certain width sidewalks shall be constructed of a certain width not only prescribes the width of the sidewalk, but by mere arithmetical computation prescribes the width of the roadway of such streets.⁹⁷ A statutory provision as to width referring to the creation of a public highway by dedication and acceptance does not apply to the establishment of a village street acquired by purchase or condemnation.⁹⁸

Error in recorded plat. While it will be presumed that a recorded plat shows a correct description of the lines and dimensions of the street,⁹⁹ the record, if erroneous, is conclusive only where it appears that rights have been acquired in reliance on it.¹ The true location of the street may be pleaded and proved as against one who is alleged to have knowledge of the error² or who could have had such knowledge by the exercise of ordinary diligence.³

Boundary by waters or watercourses. Where a navigable lake or river is adopted as one of the boundaries of a street, the rule applied is the same as in the case of a private grant,⁴ and, if the street is bounded only by navigable water, the boundary is the low-water mark,⁵ or the center of a navigable stream,⁶ unless there is an apparent intention that the street shall stop at the edge.⁷ Where a river is indicated on a plat to be the boundary of one side of a street, it will control a statement in the plat that the street is to be of a certain width.⁸ So, where a highway is laid out along a shore, following the shore line, there is no constructive extension of the street into the water, although it touches the water at intervals.⁹

When streets run to navigable water, the extension of the shore front by accretions or otherwise generally extends the street to the new water line,¹⁰ and this is so even where the street terminates in a bulkhead.¹¹ So, where a street, as originally laid

Acquisition and abandonment

Where a highway is laid out by the city or by plat and dedication and the city for more than twenty years opens and uses a strip of land of the same width as and for such highway, which strip by mistake does not exactly coincide with the lines of the laid-out way, the city acquires the right to use that particular strip for its highway and thereby abandons those portions of the laid-out way not included within the strip actually used.—Blatz Brewing Co. v. out, was bounded by a river, the mere fact that a portion of the street at the water's edge had been called a "public landing" does not necessarily preclude it from being held as a part of the street.¹² A resolution providing for the extension of a street to a river will authorize the acquisition of land necessary to extend the street to the bulkhead line and not merely to the high-water mark, in order to give the city access to the river as contemplated;¹³ and where a map shows a terminus of a street some distance short of high-water mark, proceedings to open the street are effective to open it to the ocean notwithstanding the inaccuracy of the map, where the character of the proceedings clearly indicates the purpose to open it to that point.¹⁴

Surveying, bounding, or marking out. The municipal authorities having the care of the highways of the municipality have the power even in the absence of special statutory authority to survey, bound, or mark out the lines of an existing highway.¹⁵ Such a proceeding is distinct from a proceeding to lay out a highway,¹⁶ and the procedure prescribed by statute for the laying out of highways is inapplicable.¹⁷ The determination of the boundaries of a street by a municipal body requires action of a judicial nature,¹⁸ and the parties to be affected have a right to notice¹⁹ and to be heard.²⁰ Where the procedure to establish the bounds of a street which have become lost and uncertain is prescribed by statute, strict compliance with each of the steps required by the statute is essential to the validity of the proceedings.²¹

A statute providing for the designation of street lines by commissioners and making the record or map or profile filed by them "full evidence" of the street does not deprive abutting property owners of the right to have a judicial determination of the boundaries of their properties, but only makes the designated documents prima facie evidence thereof.²² Where a statute provides that, on notice from one intending to erect a building within a specified distance from the street, the city engineer shall proceed to mark out and define the street if the line can be accurately determined, a street line not correctly marked by the city engineer is not binding on such an owner.²³ In an action by persons owning land adjacent to an alley to establish the boundaries of such alley, other abutting owners are properly made parties, since the determination of such boundaries necessarily affects their rights.²⁴ Under a statute providing for the appointment of county processioners, the act of processioners in locating the public square and streets of a city is not binding on the property owners of the city whose rights are involved unless such property owners consented to the act of the processioners.²⁵

§ 1664. Alteration of Course or Width

Municipal authority to alter the course or width of a street must be exercised in accordance with charter and statutory provisions.

Municipal authority to alter the course or width of a street is dependent on the charter or general statutes, as discussed supra § 1045, and such authority must be exercised in accordance therewith.²⁶ An ordinance is void which merely reduces the width of a street without designating what part shall remain.²⁷ The owner of a city lot has a remedy in equity against an attempt of the city and the owner of other lots in a subdivision to change the location of a street where the injury alleged is special and peculiar,²⁸ but one not an abutting owner can-

"Alteration" of street defined

As applied to streets, the word "alteration" generally refers to a change in the source thereof, and therefore necessarily involves, to some extent, the establishment of a new street for which the substitution is made.—Rogers v. Attica, 98 N. Y.S. 665, 113 App.Div. 603—2 C.J. p 1166 note 91.

Acquisition of property

If ordinance directing establishment of new building line was initial step to widening street, it was ineffective until abutting owners by gift, contract, or condemnation transferred their rights to public.—Nusbaum v. City of Norfolk, 145 S.E. 257, 151 Va. 801.

not enjoin a municipal government from changing the course of a street for the public benefit, where his access to his property is not impaired, his remedy at law by action for damages being adequate.²⁹

Discretion of municipality. The determination of the width of a public road belongs to the local authorities and not to the courts.³⁰ Similarly, the municipality has discretion in altering or relocating a street³¹ and the exercise of its discretion is not subject to judicial interference except for abuse.³² If a municipality ordains that the width of a highway shall be changed, it will be presumed that it is done in the interest of the public, and is necessary for public purposes, and the burden of showing the contrary will be on the persons who object to the proceeding,³³ but the exclusive control of the streets and the power to make regulations for keeping them in repair, conferred on the municipal authorities by statute, does not imply the power to narrow their width, at discretion, after they have been established and improved and have gone into general public use, even though it may be to the public advantage so to do.³⁴ Where a municipality has decided on alterations and its decision has been acted on by the court in the appointment of commissioners, it is not competent for the municipality to resume the subject and alter a plan promulgated by it on the faith of the stability of which persons have made purchases of lots which will be materially depreciated in value if a new plan is adopted.³⁵

Effect of alteration. It has been held that the alteration of an existing street by competent authority operates as a discontinuance of such portions of the old street as are not embraced within the limits fixed for the new one,³⁶ and this without an express order of discontinuance.³⁷

Sidewalks. Where the statute in no way fixes the width of the street, or the relative widths of the roadway and the sidewalk, the necessity for making a change in the width of a sidewalk is a matter for the determination of the municipal authorities in their discretion under the general power over streets conferred by statute.³⁸ A municipal corporation may not arbitrarily prevent an abutting owner from constructing a sidewalk of a reasonable width in a street dedicated for public use,³⁹ and where a street is too narrow for the increasing public needs if sidewalks are built in it, the city's reme-

Narrowing dedicated sidewalk

Where owner of property built sidewalk thereon adjacent to street and impliedly dedicated sidewalk to public by permitting unrestricted public use thereof, without expressly restricting use to be made of sidewalk, city could widen street by removing part of sidewalk over objections of subsequent owner of abutting property, as long as remaining sidewalk would accommodate pedestrian travel and afford ingress to, and egress from, abutting property.—City of Fulton v. 4. VACATION

§ 1665. Power to Vacate

Subject to constitutional limitations, the state has plenary power to vacate streets and this power may be exercised by the legislature or delegated to a municipal corporation or to a board or commission.

Subject to the limitations contained in the Constitution of the United States and in its own constitution, the power of a state to vacate streets or other public ways within its borders is plenary and absolute,⁴² and this power may be exercised by the state legislature,⁴³ or may be delegated to a municipal corporation⁴⁴ or to a board or commission,⁴⁵ notwithstanding a constitutional provision prohibiting the legislature from vacating streets by local or special laws.⁴⁶ The power to vacate streets may also be given to the owners of the abutting property.⁴⁷

The power to vacate streets is not inherent in a municipal corporation,⁴⁸ but must be conferred on it in express terms or by necessary implication;⁴⁹ it is not conferred by the power to grade⁵⁰ or to establish the boundaries of⁵¹ streets, nor is the permanent closing of a street authorized by the general power of the municipality to control, alter, or widen streets,⁵² or in the interest of public safety temporarily to close them.⁵³ Although the legislature has delegated the power to vacate streets to the municipal authorities, its exercise is dependent on the will and subject to the control of the legislature;⁵⁴ the legislature may revoke it in part as well as in whole,⁵⁵ or, without an express revocation, may exercise it in any particular instance.⁵⁶

A reservation of the right to use the vacated street for water or sewer pipes or other public utilities has been held to invalidate an attempted vacation,⁵⁷ although it has also been held that in such case the reservation, and not the vacation, is invalid.⁵⁸ Under a power to vacate a street or alley or any part thereof, a municipality may vacate a portion of an alley measured from a horizontal plane a specified distance above its surface indefinitely upward without vacating the surface of the alley.⁵⁹

It has been held that a city may vacate a street as a measure of safety under the police power of the municipality,⁶⁰ but under such power a municipality may not close a street for a reason affecting the general public only indirectly.⁶¹ Notwithstanding a power is given the local board in each local improvement district to initiate proceedings to close streets within the district, a general board given power to initiate and carry through such public improvements as it deems for the best interests of the city at large is not deprived of its power to institute proceedings for the closing of a street.⁶² Authority to a board of public works to vacate a street not on the city plan without specific authorization by an ordinance of the municipal council must be expressly granted.⁶³

(2) Statute authorizing commissioner of public lands to vacate platted tideland streets did not restrict cities' power under general statute to vacate single streets on abutting property owners' petition.—Petersen v. City of Seattle, 71 P.2d 668, 191 Wash. 587.

(3) Track elevation statute held not to supersede general statute with respect to vacation of streets.—Neff v. City of Indianapolis, 198 N.E. 328, 209 Ind. 203.

jurisdiction to vacate any street or part thereof will not be construed to confer on the court jurisdiction of a proceeding to vacate a portion of a street by making it narrower, where to do so would be to repeal an exclusive power vested in the city authorities to straighten or alter existing streets.⁶⁶

Conditional vacation. As a general rule, the power to close and vacate streets does not include the power to close streets conditionally,⁶⁷ as, for example, with a reservation of a privilege of reopening them,⁶⁸ or with a proviso that on a certain contingency the vacation shall be void.⁶⁹ The authority having the power to vacate, however, may in its discretion refuse to vacate a street except on compliance with specified conditions.⁷⁰ Moreover, under a statute or charter provision conferring such authority, an ordinance vacating a street may contain reasonable restrictions and conditions,⁷¹ and on failure to comply with such conditions and limitations the city may reopen the street.⁷² It has been held that, even if the municipality is without power to vacate a street with a condition subsequent, a vacation so made is nevertheless valid, only the condition being ineffective.⁷³

Provision of other means of access. It has been held that a city may discontinue a street if other suitable means of access to abutting land are left, even though such access is not as convenient as that afforded by the street to be vacated,⁷⁴ and the statutes sometimes make the provision of another way a condition to the vacation of a street.⁷⁵ Where a statute authorizing the closing of a street for railroad purposes provides that before it shall become operative the railroad shall provide another street of a specified width, title to which shall be vested in the municipality, the provision of such a street is a condition precedent and is not complied with by the furnishing of a new street of less than the statutory width.⁷⁶

Provision for damages. In the absence of statutory or constitutional requirement, provision for the ascertainment of damages occasioned by the vacation of a street need not be made before its vacation.⁷⁷

§ 1666. Streets or Ways over Which Power Extends

In general, all the public ways and streets of a municipality, however acquired, are subject to the power of vacation.

In general, all the streets and public ways of a city, however acquired, are subject to the power of vacation.⁷⁸ A power to vacate streets may be exercised whether the public acquired the street to be vacated by condemnation or by dedication.⁷⁹ A condition in a deed conveying land to a city for a public way providing that it shall always remain free and open as a public street or alley does not preclude the city from vacating it as it may vacate other streets and alleys.⁸⁰ A statute giving the city the right to vacate streets and limiting the provision to the "streets of the town" does not authorize the vacating of a street, half of which is within the city and half without.⁸¹

Where a county highway by incorporation within the boundaries of the municipality has become a street thereof, it may not be vacated by the county authorities,⁸² and, on the other hand, where a county road when taken into a municipal corporation still remains a county road, although subject to the control and supervision of the municipal authorities, it may not be vacated by the municipal authorities⁸³ unless such power has been conferred on such authorities by the legislature.⁸⁴ It has been held that a municipal corporation, under its statutory power to open, vacate, and improve streets, may impliedly and incidentally withdraw from cooperative maintenance with a county court of a highway leading into the city, by the vacation or discontinuance of a street constituting part of such highway.⁸⁵ The legislature may confer on a municipality the power to vacate a state road within the borders of the municipality.⁸⁶

Effect of private easements. The question whether the private easements of the owners holding by conveyances with reference to a platted street may be extinguished by a vacation of the street is considered infra § 1683. However, although it may be held that such easements cannot be affected, the municipality may renounce the rights conferred by the plat with reference to which conveyances have been made,⁸⁷ and may vacate streets shown thereon to the extent of terminating its liability to maintain and keep them in repair.⁸⁸

Effect of rights of public service corporations. The right of the municipality to vacate streets is not defeated by the fact that it has given a public service corporation the right to lay pipes therein.⁸⁹

§ 1667. Discretion as to Exercise of Power

Whether the power to vacate a street will be exercised is, as a rule, within the discretion of the municipal corporation or the board to which the power has been delegated.

Whether a power to vacate a street or a part thereof will be exercised is, as a rule, within the discretion of the municipal body possessing the power,⁹⁰ although such discretion must not be exercised arbitrarily and without regard to the rights and necessities of the public,⁹¹ as they are at the present and may be in the future.⁹² Where a street is vacated by the municipality in good faith on the expectation of certain events, the fact that such events do not occur does not render the vacation void.⁹³

Although the statutes impliedly confer the right to vacate a state highway on the state highway commissioner, the control the legislature has given such official must be measured by the scope of his office, and under a proper construction of statutes defining the powers of such official and of municipalities it should be held that a municipality has the delegated power to vacate a state road running within its borders.—Rogers v. Public interest

City, delegated authority to close streets, must decide in first instance whether closing is in public interest.—People v. City of San Rafael, 273 P. 138, 95 Cal.App. 733.

Premature expression of opinion

Street commissioners' opinion that discontinuance of street would be desirable was subject to change and not binding on them at hearing not yet had.—MacDonald v. Board of Street Com'rs of City of Boston, 167 N.E. 417, 268 Mass. 288.

Need for housing project

Whether a low-cost housing project could be constructed without using a part of city street vacated by ordinance was a question for the discretion of municipal authorities, and not for the judgment of the individual landowner seeking to prevent the vacation of the street.—Con Realty Co. v. Ellenstein, 14 A.2d 544, 125 N.J.Law 196.

§ 1668. Private and Public Interests

A municipality or board to which the power to vacate streets has been delegated may exercise such power when, and only when, the vacation of the street is in the public interest or when the street is no longer required for public use and convenience.

A municipality or board to which the power to vacate streets has been delegated may exercise such power when, and only when, the vacation of the street is in the public interest⁹⁴ or when the street is no longer required for public use and convenience;⁹⁵ it may not vacate a street for the benefit of a purely private interest,⁹⁶ although it receives a consideration therefor,⁹⁷ and the question whether the public interest is subserved may not be made to depend on how much the city will receive by reason of its action.⁹⁸ On the other hand, the fact that some private interest may be served does not necessarily render the vacation of a street or alley void,⁹⁹ nor does the fact that, while some private interests are benefited, others are incidentally damaged,¹ where it does not appear that no consideration of public interest led to such vacation.²

Further, decisions to the effect that it is against public policy for a municipality to demand and receive compensation as a condition precedent to the exercise of its power to vacate a street or alley no longer needed for public use are controlled by a statute authorizing such action on the part of the city,³ and an ordinance vacating a street or alley may be conditioned on the payment of compensation by benefited property owners.⁴ It has been held that the public interest is sufficiently served by the vacation where the municipality is thereby relieved from the expense of maintaining a street used by only a small portion of the public⁵ or where the municipality is thereby relieved from liability to the traveling public for injuries from a street having numerous defects.⁶

Betterment of public service. The resulting betterment of the service of public service companies is of such public interest as to authorize the vacation of streets for the purpose of devoting the land to the use of such companies.⁷

Objection by landowners. Ordinarily a street may be vacated despite the objections of abutting owners,⁸ but a statute authorizing the vacation of a public street in a platted town site or addition to a town site on a petition of the owners of the lands adjoining the street, on a proper finding that no private rights will be injured or endangered thereby, does not justify a vacation, where such vacation will cut off public access to an objecting owner's lots.⁹

Application by owners of platted lands. Under statutes authorizing the vacation of a plat on the application of the owners of the lands included, the platted streets should not be vacated unless the public interest will be served,¹⁰ and, if the statute provides that the plat shall be vacated only where there is no valid objection thereto, streets should not be vacated for the benefit of private persons when such vacation will in all probability seriously inconvenience the general public.¹¹

Disposition to be made of property. Where a street or other public place is properly vacated, the city may devote the ground to whatever legitimate purpose it may elect, as discussed infra § 1683 b, and the use which it is proposed to make of the ground is material only as bearing on the question of whether the vacation is in fact for the public benefit.¹²

§ 1669. Effect of Reversion or Transfer of Land to Private Ownership

Where the vacation is otherwise lawful, its validity is not affected by the fact that the land embraced within the vacated street or alley thereby becomes private property.

Where the power to vacate is otherwise rightfully exercised, it does not affect the validity of the vacation that the land embraced within the vacated street or alley thereby becomes private property¹³ or that it is devoted to a private use.¹⁴

§ 1670. Mode of Vacation and Proceedings to Vacate in General

Vacation instigated by abutting owner

Mere fact that vacation of street or part thereof was at instigation of individual or private corporation who owns abutting property to enable him to use vacated portion in his business does not of itself invalidate the vacation or constitute such fraud or abuse of discretion as, in absence of any further showing, will authorize court of equity to declare the vacating resolution to be void.—*Bethel M. 44 C.J. p 900 note 40.

The procedure to vacate a street or other public way must be in strict compliance with the statutory provisions relating thereto.¹⁵ While a statute which provides a complete system for vacating streets will be construed as repealing a prior act,¹⁶ provisions of different statutes which are not inconsistent may be read together to provide a harmonious scheme.¹⁷ However, a statute giving a method of vacating a street in cases in which the municipal corporation is not in active operation, but which is also applicable to cases wherein the municipal corporation is in active operation, is cumulative to a statutory method applicable only in cases where the municipal corporation is in active operation,¹⁸ and alternative methods may be provided under separate statutes.¹⁹

Vacation by dissolution of corporation; statutory conveyance. A discontinuance of a town corporation and its classification as an unincorporated town or village does not vacate the streets of a town, and the right of the people to use such streets continues.²⁰ In such a case the vacation of a street as a highway by the county constitutes merely a disclaimer of jurisdiction and does not affect the rights of lot owners to use the street as a highway.²¹ A statute directing the conveyance of certain lots by commissioners in whom the title to land and streets in a platted city has been vested for the use of the state will be construed as including intervening streets, where the intent is clearly shown to convey the land, not as lots but as an entire tract.²²

Striking or omission from plat or map. The adoption of a map showing the location and establishment of streets by ordinance and its subsequent ratification by the legislature works a discontinuance and abandonment of streets not shown thereon, although shown by previous maps.²³ It is provided by some statutes that a street is closed when it is omitted from a map showing the public highways adopted by the municipal authorities under proper resolutions, duly filed.²⁴ The omission need not be absolute, as it is sufficient if the streets intended as public highways are clearly distinguishable from the streets intended to be discontinued.²⁵ Such an act does not apply to private ways not accepted by the city.²⁶

Where a board of public works is given authority to confirm or reject all plans or surveys or revisions of plans which have been made by direction of the municipal council, the act of the department of public works in striking a street from a city plan in obedience to an ordinance of the municipal council amounts to a legal vacation of the street.²⁷ However, where exclusive power has been conferred on certain commissioners to lay out and close streets and to cause maps to be filed which shall be conclusive with respect to both the city and landowners, the mere omission of a street from the map filed by the commissioners is not conclusive that such street was closed by them.²⁸

Further, the mere act of municipal authorities in adopting a plan and locating streets does not have the effect of vacating public roads running through the municipal corporation not adopted as streets on the plan,²⁹ and, although a map prepared in providing for a system of street improvements and which is approved by the legislature fails to show certain other streets, they will not be regarded as vacated by implication.³⁰ Under a statute providing that a street is closed when municipal authorities have adopted proper resolutions to that end and have filed a map showing the public highways, the legal discontinuance of the street is complete when the prescribed map is filed indicating the proposed change,³¹ but the physical closing is postponed until other access is provided by the opening of other

§ 1671. Vacation by Court

Under some statutes the courts may vacate streets in a municipal corporation.

Under some statutes the courts may vacate streets in a municipal corporation,³⁴ and a statute conferring jurisdiction on a court to vacate municipal streets has been held valid;³⁵ but a statute requiring the court to vacate a street on the application of the owners of the abutting property has been held invalid as in conflict with a constitutional provision reserving to cities reasonable control of their streets.³⁶ Power in a court to vacate a street has been held in some jurisdictions to arise from a statute authorizing the vacation of plats by such court.³⁷ Where concurrent jurisdiction in the matter of vacating streets is vested in a particular court and in the municipal council, the court may in its discretion refuse to entertain proceedings to vacate a street where the matter has already been presented to the common council and it has made an order va-

uating the street on performance of certain conditions imposed.³⁸

A proceeding before a court for the vacation of a street is a statutory proceeding and is not technically an action or suit.³⁹ Such a proceeding has been held to be a proceeding in rem,⁴⁰ and there must be a compliance with the requirements of the statute governing the proceeding.⁴¹ Under a statute so providing, the court may not vacate a street on the application of property owners unless it is useless for the purpose for which it was laid out.⁴² Under a statute giving the court jurisdiction to vacate a street which has been rendered unnecessary by the opening of a street or highway in place thereof, the court is without jurisdiction to vacate a street which, while not necessary for travel, is being used for the maintenance of a sewer.⁴³

Word "useless," as used in statute permitting vacation of a street when it has become useless for the purpose for which it was laid out, should not be given any restricted meaning, but should be given the meaning of the term as commonly defined as being of no use, unserviceable, and answering no desired purpose.—Application of Baldwin, 15 N.W.2d 184, 218 Minn. 11.

Unused street

Where street which originally connected boulevard with boat landing on lake had not been used by any one in the community for almost twenty-five years, and town did nothing toward keeping it in repair, but street still afforded public means of access to lake, street could not be vacated.—Petition of Krebs, 6 N. W.2d 803, 213 Minn. 344.

Private benefit

Under the statute providing that a street or part thereof may not be vacated unless useless for purpose for which it was laid out, fact that vacation of street will be to interest of persons whose property adjoins street does not, of itself, authorize vacation of street.—Petition of Krebs, supra.

cation of a street, an action shall be instituted in a court for the purpose of closing it, all persons owning property abutting on the street within the block affected are necessary parties, without reference to whether the property abuts on the portion of the street to be closed.⁴⁵ Under a statute giving a right to appeal and be heard to any person or persons "interested," a city has a right to be heard as an interested party in a proceeding instituted to vacate any of its streets.⁴⁶ The petitioners for the vacation of a street do not, by answering a petition to intervene, bar themselves from moving to dismiss the intervention.⁴⁷ After judgment vacating a street, the court has been held without power to reopen the proceedings to permit the intervention of another party.⁴⁸

Petition and notice. The proceeding being statutory, the petitioner must aver facts sufficient to bring himself within the provisions of the statute.⁴⁹ For example, where the statute so requires, the petition must set forth the names of the persons particularly interested in the property which it is sought to vacate.⁵⁰ Under a statute requiring the persons interested to file a petition describing the property to be vacated, giving the names of the persons to be affected, it is, however, not essential that the names of the owners be incorporated in the petition.⁵¹ The requisite number of abutting owners must join in the petition.⁵² The sufficiency of a petition may be tested by demurrer, although the statute provides that the prayer of the petition shall be granted if no written objection is made within a time fixed⁵³ and although the statute contains provisions authorizing the filing of remonstrances.⁵⁴ Notice of the petition must be given to the persons

Consent of property owners. Statutory provisions as to the consent of the owners of adjoining property must be complied with,⁵⁶ although it has been held that a technical error will not be fatal.⁵⁷

Remonstrance. Where the statute provides for remonstrances by parties interested, the right of remonstrance is not, unless expressly so limited, confined to owners of property abutting on the part of the street to be vacated.⁵⁸ Where a statute provides that, if no objection in writing is made within a fixed time, the court shall grant the petition, the court may reject a remonstrance filed after the statutory period,⁵⁹ and, although the court permits the remonstrance to be filed, it may afterward, contrary to the rule applicable to civil actions generally, reject it.⁶⁰ It has been held that the only grounds of remonstrance that will be recognized by the court are those specified by the statute.⁶¹

Hearing and determination. In determining an application by property owners to vacate a street, the final test is whether the public interest will or will not be best served by discontinuing the way.⁶² In a proceeding by property owners to vacate a street, it has been held that the burden is on the petitioners to show that no public interest will be served by continuing the street or that its vacation will be beneficial to the public interest,⁶³ and this burden is not discharged by showing that another street is more useful.⁶⁴ Questions of fact are for the trial court,⁶⁵ and a general finding for the petitioners and against the remonstrators amounts to a finding against the remonstrators on all the questions of fact.⁶⁶

Judgment or order. While it has been held that an order vacating a street must show on its face the statutory jurisdictional facts,⁶⁷ it has also been held that the jurisdiction of the court to render judgment can be collaterally attacked only on showing some fact, recital, or statement contained in the record which affirmatively establishes the absence of jurisdiction.⁶⁸ An order which complies with a valid statute is not void because it also complies with an amendment to the statute which may be invalid.⁶⁹

Reopening proceedings. Where judgment vacating a street was entered at the instance of private persons without any showing that the street had become useless, it is an abuse of discretion to deny a timely motion to reopen the proceedings.⁷⁰

Review. A proceeding for the vacation of a street is a special proceeding, as distinguished from a civil action, and is not appealable under a statute applicable to such actions.⁷¹ The judgment of the trial court as to whether a street will in reasonable probability be soon needed for public use other than that provided for in the decree vacating it may be reviewed notwithstanding the evidence is conflicting.⁷² Certiorari to review the action of the court will not be granted where the petitioner has rested on his rights for an unreasonable length of time while another, in reliance on the regularity of the proceedings, has made large improvements.⁷³ On certiorari, review is limited to whether the lower court acted within its jurisdiction.⁷⁴

Costs. It has been held that costs may not be awarded against one who petitions to have a street vacated.⁷⁵

§ 1672. Vacation by Municipal Councils or Boards

- a. In general
- b. Judicial review
- c. Persons entitled to attack

a. In General

Proceedings before municipal councils or boards to vacate streets must be in conformity with the procedure prescribed by statute.

Proceedings before municipal councils or boards to which the authority to vacate streets has been delegated must be in conformity with the procedure, if any, prescribed by statute,⁷⁶ and the record should show the existence of jurisdictional facts.⁷⁷ Failure of the council to acquire jurisdiction of proceedings for the vacation of a street in the manner required by statute cannot be cured by a consent of the abutting owners.⁷⁸ A municipality may not exercise its power to vacate streets in such way as to disable it to open them.⁷⁹ The state has been held not a necessary party to a proceeding by a municipality to vacate a state road within municipal limits.⁸⁰

Petition or consent of property owners. Where full power is granted to the municipal council to vacate streets, it may act on its own motion,⁸¹ and a petition of property owners or their consent is not necessary in the absence of a statute requiring it.⁸²

Failure to recite jurisdictional fact
County court in vacating streets and alleys in a town acted judicially in a matter intrusted to it by statute, and, even though acting as a court of limited jurisdiction, its judgment was entitled to the same favorable presumptions accorded in like cases to circuit courts and could be collaterally attacked only for some defect in judgment or some necessary proceeding on which judgment was based; the mere fact that county court judgment failed to recite that notice was given as required by statute then in force did not authorize collateral impeachment of such judgment, but in absence of contrary proof it was presumed that requisite notice was given.—Kelley v. Statutory requirements as to the petition or consent of landowners must, however, be strictly complied with.⁸³ Only such owners as are within the contemplation of the statute are required to join in the petition.⁸⁴ Where the statute provides that the vacation of a street shall be granted only on petition of a majority of the owners of property on the line thereof, it will, where the proceeding is to vacate a part of the street, be construed to require the petition of a majority of the owners on such part only;⁸⁵ and, where the owners of land abutting on a proposed improvement are required to consent to the vacation of a street, the consent of owners further along the street is not necessary.⁸⁶ So, where the statute provides for the petition of the owners of more than two thirds of the property abutting on the part of the street or alley which it is sought to vacate, the petition of the owners directly abutting on the part of the street vacated is sufficient, although such part does not extend through the entire platted block.⁸⁷

Under a statute authorizing the vacation of a street or any part thereof without application to the court, provided all persons interested in the plat or a distinct part thereof shall file their consent with the common council, consent is required only of those having a legal right to compensation.⁸⁸ Where a charter provides that the council on receiving a petition shall, if it deems it expedient that the matter be proceeded with, order the petition to be filed and notice of a hearing given, the question whether the petition was signed by the requisite number of petitioners is one of fact for the council,⁸⁹ and its determination, in the absence of fraud, cannot be set aside, except in a direct proceeding,⁹⁰ and it is competent for the legislature to provide that such a finding by the city council shall be conclusive against collateral attack.⁹¹

Notice. In the absence of a statutory requirement, notice of the proposed vacation is not necessary,⁹² but notice of the proposed vacation, where required by statute, must be given in the manner and to the persons specified by the statute.⁹³ It has been held that persons present at every stage of the proceedings may not complain of lack of notice,⁹⁴ but it has also been held that a failure to give the notice required by the statute is not waived by the appearance of the property owners in opposition to the ordinance.⁹⁵ Where the statute requires notice for a specified time before the meeting of the municipi-

Acquiescing owners

Fact that certain abutting property owners affected by the vacation of a street, who have acquiesced in such vacation, were not given notice of the proposed vacation is not ground for holding the ordinance vacating the street void where the statute makes no provision for notice.—Bellevue v. Bellevue Impr. Co., 90 N.W. 1002, 65 Neb. 52.

Notice addressed "To Whom It May Concern"

Fact that publication of notice following adoption of declaratory resolution by board of public works of city was directed "To Whom It May Concern" was not error, where the only landowner shown by resolution to have been injured or benefited was named in the body of the notice.—Skinner v. Pitman-Moore Co., Ind.App., 85 N.E.2d 279.

Abutting owner

(1) Where there was no physical connection between plaintiff's property and portion of alley vacated by city council, plaintiff's property did not abut on the vacated portion, and, hence, plaintiff was not entitled to notice of council's intention to vacate.—Bulen v. Moody, 63 N.E.2d 916, 77 Ohio App. 61.

(2) Property at end of street sought to be vacated held abutting property requiring publication of ordinance where owners' consent was not filed.—Messinger v. City of Cincinnati, 173 N.E. 260, 36 Ohio App. 337.

Landowner not listed for award or assessment

Where landowner who was not included by board of public works of city on list of awards and assessments for vacation of portion of city street, there was no requirement under statute that landowner be served with written notice or be given notice by publication as to assessments or awards; and court was required to presume, in absence of a contrary showing, that board complied with statute relating to the serving of written notice or notice by publication on those landowners included on list of awards and assessments.—Skinner v. Pitman-Moore Co., Ind. App., 85 N.E.2d 279.

pal council at which action is to be taken on the proposal to vacate the street, failure to give notice for such time is not cured by the fact that the ordinance vacating the street is passed at a subsequent meeting of the council more than the statutory period after the publication of notice.⁹⁶

Legal notice, when given, is sufficient notice of adjourned meetings and additional notice need not be given,⁹⁷ and, where a city council obtains jurisdiction of the petition to vacate certain streets by virtue of the original notice, it does not lose jurisdiction so completely as to render its subsequent order void because, on a postponement of consideration of the question, no continuance was entered, although the council considered the question of its next meeting without further service.⁹⁸

Protests. Protests must be filed at the time fixed by the statute.⁹⁹ So, where the statute provides for the filing of protests after the passage of the ordinance of intention and posting of notice of public work, a protest is inoperative which is filed after the presentation of the petition and before the passage of the ordinance of intention.¹ In case the proceeding is a summary one under which no personal notice is given and in which there is no right to show individual injury or damage, an abutting owner is not required to appear before the council and protest, and his failure to do so will not preclude him from thereafter seeking injunctive relief.²

constitution or statute, the municipality need not hold a hearing before vacating a street.³ Where the statute under which proceedings are brought provides for the filing of a proposed replat and a petition for its adoption by the city council, the council must accept or reject the replat in its entirety and cannot, in the absence of statutory authority, modify the replat and then adopt it as modified.⁴ The record or ordinance need not show a determination by the municipal council that the street vacation is in the public interest, since such determination is implied from the action of the council in vacating the street.⁵ In the absence of a statutory or charter provision so requiring, it is not necessary on vacating the street to determine in advance the use to which the land shall be devoted.⁶

Defects and irregularities. Where the statutory provisions are observed, the action of the municipality in vacating a street has the force of a judgment, and irregularities not jurisdictional will not invalidate the vacation.⁷

Ordinance or order. The council may vacate a street by deed⁸ or order.⁹ It has been held that, although the statute is silent as to whether a power to vacate shall be exercised by ordinance or by resolution, where the power is conveyed by a part of a statute which elsewhere refers to power to be exercised by ordinance, making no reference to powers to be exercised by resolution, the power to vacate must be exercised by an ordinance.¹⁰ Under a statute authorizing the vacation of a public

Final action on day specified by notice not required

Under statute authorizing board of public works to meet at time fixed by notice of final action in street vacation proceedings, consider remonstrances "and thereupon" take final action, board was not required to take final action on day of initial meeting pursuant to notice, and resolution of vacation confirmed two days after initial meeting, pursuant to adjournment from initial meeting for want of quorum, was not void.—Regenstreif v. Authorization of obstruction

The placing of obstructive curbs on street, which necessitated a more circuitous route for abutting property owner to reach portion of its property fronting on such street, on which were located a filling station and tavern, was merely a regulation in use of street, and was not a vacation of street, so as to require adoption of an ordinance to such end.—Calumet Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n of Chicago v. City of Chicago, 29 N.E.2d 292, 306 Ill.App. 524.

street by the property owners with the acquiescence of the municipality, its consent must be expressed through its records.¹¹ The intent to vacate the street or other way must sufficiently appear from the language of the ordinance.¹² The mere repeal of a prior ordinance authorizing the opening of a street cannot be regarded as a proceeding to vacate it.¹³ However, the authority to occupy a portion of a street may be construed as vacating such portion thereof,¹⁴ but an ordinance granting a railroad a right of way in the street does not vacate the street.¹⁵ Courts will presume that city authorities complied with charter requirements, and that their action in closing a street effected a legal closing;¹⁶ and the language of an ordinance will be reasonably construed to include in a vacation of a street parts thereof which, if not vacated, would be useless for public travel.¹⁷ An order of county commissioners allowing a change of location of streets and providing that all the streets should be improved is not conditional in the sense that it will not be effective until the new routes are improved.¹⁸

Repeal of ordinance. Except where the ordinance is repealed before the time at which it is to go into effect,¹⁹ the repeal of an ordinance vacating a street does not have the effect of reopening the street²⁰ unless it is accompanied by the same formalities necessary to the opening of a street in the first instance.²¹

b. Judicial Review

The exercise by a municipality of its discretionary power to vacate streets ordinarily is not subject to judicial review except for abuse of discretion, fraud, or lack of jurisdiction.

Construction of viaduct

The enactment by city of ordinance providing for construction of viaduct according to plans and specifications on file in office of city clerk and approved by board of commissioners of city, and construction of such viaduct by railroads affected, did not effectuate a vacation of portion of street abutting adjacent owner's property, notwithstanding construction tended to prevent ready access to owner's building, where access was not totally cut off.—Finlay v. Union Pac. R. Co., D.C.Kan., 6 F.R.D. 284.

Separate ordinances

An ordinance requiring a railroad to elevate its tracks on a street held to be construed together with an ordinance passed several years later establishing a new street, where neither ordinance would have been passed without the other, and they must be considered as one ordinance with respect to a contention that the elevation ordinance vacated the street.—Chicago, B. & Q. raised at any time,³⁵ and the proceedings are a nullity.³⁶

Procedure. The action of the municipality in vacating or refusing to vacate a street may be reviewed only in a direct proceeding³⁷ and is not subject to collateral attack.³⁸ The right to appeal does not exist in the absence of statute,³⁹ although it is sometimes conferred.⁴⁰ Under the views taken in some jurisdictions as to the use which may be made of the writ of certiorari, the validity of an ordinance vacating a street or other public way may, in some jurisdictions, be tested by that writ.⁴¹

Pleading. The presumption that the vacation of a street was for a public purpose cannot be indulged to sustain a demurrer to a complaint attacking the vacation of a street on the ground that it was for a private, and not for a public, purpose.⁴² It has been held that an abuse of discretion or fraud must be alleged in a petition to the court to review the action of the municipality in vacating or refusing to vacate a street.⁴³

Evidence. The action of the municipality in vacating the street is presumed to be valid,⁴⁴ and the burden is on the party attacking the vacation to prove its invalidity.⁴⁵ It has been held that parol evidence is admissible to show whether the purpose of the vacation was public or private,⁴⁶ but is not admissible to show the motives which actuated the members of the council.⁴⁷ Evidence as to the effect of the vacation on adjoining property and on the public is admissible on the question of whether the vacation was for a public purpose.⁴⁸ General rules have been applied as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence.⁴⁹

Hearing and determination. The court in reviewing the vacation of a street by a municipality will look beyond the recitals of the ordinance or resolution and the statements of the members of the municipal council and will examine the results and the surrounding circumstances to learn the real purpose of the vacation.⁵⁰ Questions of fact are for the trial court.⁵¹

A mere inconvenience resulting from the closing of a street when another reasonable, although perhaps not equally accessible, approach remains does not give rise to a legal right in one so inconvenienced, and courts do not look with favor on claims based on such grounds.—Mandell v. Board of Com'rs of Bernalillo County, 99 P.2d 108, 44 N.M. 109.

may attack the vacation of a street by a municipality.⁵⁴ According to some decisions, a person who is not the owner of land abutting the vacated portion of the street may not attack the vacation,⁵⁵ at least where the vacation of the street does not leave him without reasonably convenient means of access to his property,⁵⁶ but other authorities hold that the right to attack a vacation by the municipality is not limited to abutting owners⁵⁷ and that a nonabutting owner may attack the validity of the vacation where it leaves him without reasonably convenient means of access.⁵⁸ The municipality may be estopped to attack the validity of an ordinance vacating a street where all the parties in interest have acted in reliance on the ordinance for a substantial period of time,⁵⁹ but it is not estopped to claim, as against abutters, that an ordinance vacating part of a street was never legally adopted, where the city has not misled them by anything done to their prejudice or otherwise.⁶⁰

§ 1673. Operation and Effect

A street in which the public has only an easement, when properly vacated, ceases to be a street, and the rights of the public therein are divested.

A street in which the public has only an easement, when properly vacated, ceases to be a street, and the rights of the public therein are divested,⁶¹ and if a street duly vacated continues open to the use of the public it is as a matter of sufferance only, and does not affect the result of the vacation unless sufficient time elapses to reestablish the street by prescription.⁶² Where the proceedings are regarded as in rem, they may be binding on persons who are not signers of an application to a municipal council for such vacation.⁶³

Temporary vacation. A temporary vacation or relinquishment of the right to control a strip of land along the side of a street for parking purposes has been held merely to amount to a revocable permit,⁶⁴ and not to estop the city afterward to claim the land where the act of the city was unauthorized,⁶⁵ and this notwithstanding improvements of the land by the owners.⁶⁶

Detachment of territory. A statute vacating streets in an addition to a city with a proviso that certain streets in the addition should not be affected does not have the effect of vacating the entire addition or detaching it from the city.⁶⁷ street may be set aside by a proceeding in equity where it was beyond the powers of the council.

The action of a municipal council in vacating a street may be set aside in a proceeding in equity where it was beyond the powers of the council,⁶⁸ as where it was a mere attempt to dispose of the public rights and interests for a private use;⁶⁹ and this is true notwithstanding the statute provides that a resolution of vacation shall be conclusive.⁷⁰ Such a proceeding must be brought by one who has suffered special injury different in kind from that suffered by the public in general,⁷¹ as, for example, one who owns property abutting on the street, part of which is vacated.⁷²

Limitations. A statute providing that no action shall be brought to annul or set aside any final order of court or action of a municipal council in proceedings for the vacation of a street after a specified time has expired is valid as within the primary power of the legislature as to the laying out and vacation of streets.⁷³ It is one of limitation and repose,⁷⁴ and is to be given a fair and reasonable construction in order to carry out its purpose.⁷⁵ A limitation on the time within which an action shall be brought to set aside an order of court or action of a city council vacating a street applies in a case wherein a street is vacated by inference through the acceptance of a conveyance of land for a street

by the city council, reciting as its consideration the vacation of the street in question.⁷⁶

Estoppel and laches. One who, with knowledge of the proceedings to vacate, delays for a long time to move to set them aside may be estopped so to do where he has, without objection, permitted large expenditures of money in reliance on the vacation,⁷⁷ but one who institutes proceedings within a reasonable time after learning of the vacation is not barred by laches.⁷⁸

§ 1675. Injunction

Injunctive relief may be obtained by a person entitled thereto against the vacation of a street by a municipal corporation where it is proceeding without jurisdiction or in violation of statutory or charter provisions or not for a public purpose or not in good faith or in abuse of discretion.

Injunctive relief may be obtained against the vacation of a street by a municipal corporation where it is proceeding without jurisdiction or in violation of statutory or charter provisions,⁷⁹ or not for a public purpose,⁸⁰ or not in good faith,⁸¹ or in abuse of discretion;⁸² but injunctive relief will not be granted where the vacation is lawful⁸³ or within the scope of the discretion of the municipal authorities,⁸⁴ although it is hasty or ill advised,⁸⁵ and such relief will not be granted because of irregularities in the assessment of damages or in making the as-

Principle that in mandamus in clear case court need not wait until evil is done held not relevant to suit to restrain discontinuance of street prior to hearing thereon; fact that parties regarded equity proceedings more expeditious did not justify equity intervention in suit to restrain discontinuance of street prior to hearing by street commissioners.—MacDonald v. assessment roll.⁸⁶ It will not be presumed as a ground for an injunction against a municipality to prevent the carrying out of a contract between it and a railroad company to vacate a street that it will not proceed by ordinance as it was empowered, and had contracted, to do.⁸⁷ In an injunction suit against a city to restrain the vacation of a street, if the city has authority to do what is alleged in the bill, such authority should be set up in the answer.⁸⁸ Where the object of the proceeding is to secure access to the railroad, and under the evidence complainant will have such a right of access whether the particular strip of land involved is a street as contended by him or a railroad strip as contended by defendants, the court has power to fix the rights of the petitioner in such strip.⁸⁹

In accordance with general rules, injunctive relief will not be granted where the remedy at law is adequate.⁹⁰ Thus, where the vacation is lawful, it is generally held that, even though a property owner's injury will be of a special character, he is not entitled to an injunction where he is entitled to compensation therefor and his remedy at law is adequate.⁹¹ A public utility company is not entitled to enjoin the vacation of a street in which its pipes are laid where it has a right to damages and review by appeal.⁹² The owner of an uncondemned easement, however, may enjoin the temporary closing of a street, and the rule that an injunction will not be granted where it would result in greater injury to defendant than its refusal would cause to petitioner has no application in such a case.⁹³

Nuisance. Injunctive relief against a vacation of a street may not be had on the theory that the vacation constitutes a common-law nuisance where it is in compliance with the law and is intended as a bona fide vacation by the municipality within its delegated power.⁹⁴

Persons entitled. Injunctive relief may be obtained by one who would sustain injury by the vacation of a street different in kind from that suffered by the general public,⁹⁵ as in the case of an abutting owner,⁹⁶ and such relief may be obtained by one who is not an abutting owner⁹⁷ although there is also authority, sometimes based on statute, that only an abutting owner is entitled to such relief.⁹⁸ In any event one whose injury is not dif-

Injunction against private persons

Statutory limitation of right to injunctive relief against vacation of streets or alleys to owners of realty abutting on part of street or alley actually closed is not limited to city itself but extends to private persons who proceed under ordinance closing or vacating streets.—Gambrell v. Chalk Hill Theatre Co., Tex.Civ.App., 205 S.W.2d 126, appeal dismissed 68 S.Ct. 1071, 334 U.S. 814, 92 L.Ed. 1745.

ferent in character from that to every other citizen may not enjoin the vacation of the street,⁹⁹ and an injunction will not issue even to an abutting owner where such special damage is not shown.¹ However, where there has been a clear invasion of the common rights of the citizens by some unauthorized act of the officers of the municipality, an injunction may be granted on the petition of the proper official on behalf of the public.² One whose property does not abut on the part of the street vacated by ordinance cannot maintain an action to enjoin the enforcement of the ordinance merely because he may be inconvenienced by such vacation.³ Where an ordinance vacating a part of a street and abandoning all control over it simply shows an intent to relinquish the public easement without closing a street physically to a property owner's use, injunctive relief is not warranted.⁴

5. ABANDONMENT

§ 1676. In General

The right of the public in a street may be lost by abandonment, but in the absence of statute abandonment is not established by mere nonuse of the street.

The right of the public in a street used as a public highway may be lost by abandonment.⁵ Abandonment of a street is a matter of intention⁶ and must be shown by a positive act of abandonment as distinguished from mere nonuser.⁷ Thus, except where it is otherwise provided by statute, as discussed infra § 1677, mere nonuser by the public⁸ or delay in opening⁹ or improving¹⁰ a street ordinarily is insufficient to show an abandonment of the street. Similarly, an abandonment of a street is not shown by a lease of the street,¹¹ its temporary use for other purposes,¹² permitting a railroad to occupy a part of the street,¹³ or continued encroachments on the street by structures,¹⁴ or the inclosure of the street or a part thereof.¹⁵

On the other hand, a street is abandoned where nonuse is accompanied by a clear and decisive act by the municipality indicating an intention to abandon.¹⁶ Moreover, it has been held that, where a street is not opened or used for the statutory period, and there is adverse possession of the street as private property under a claim of right, abandonment will be presumed.¹⁷

was not a street,¹⁸ or by an ordinance condemning a right of way for the purpose of laying sewers and water pipes,¹⁹ or by the fact that it has condemned a portion of a street in widening an intersecting street.²⁰ An abandonment of a part of a street does not work an abandonment of the whole, and a use permitted by the city of such remaining part not inconsistent with its continued use by the city for street purposes does not work an abandonment of the city's rights therein.²¹

Partial opening or improvement. The additional width of a street is not lost merely by the street being opened up and used for part only of its width,²² or by the fact that for a time its use is limited by a subway under a railroad track to only a portion of its original width.²³

Obstruction. A street will not be regarded as abandoned merely because its use is obstructed,²⁴

More delay in asserting public right will not create an abandonment.—Kelroy v. City of Clear Lake, 5 N.W.2d 12, 232 Iowa 161.

Parkway

A municipality may set off part of a highway for a particular use, such as use for a parkway, without constituting an abandonment of portion of highway set apart, and highway for its full width retains its character as a public way, subject to conversion into a driveway whenever, in the opinion of the constituted authorities, traffic conditions so require. —Spicer v. Nonuser although coupled with failure to remove obstructions erected by abutting landowners or others, will not operate as abandonment of a public street. —Village of Newport v. Taylor, 30 N.W.2d 588, 225 Minn. 299.

Overpass

Construction of overpass on city street over railroad crossing, where overpass was to be used as a roadway and original street remained partially open to traffic, was not such an abandonment or vacation of original street without proceedings therefor as would authorize abutting property owners to enjoin construction of overpass. —Cummings v. City of Minnetonka, 371 N.W. 421, 67 N.D. 214.

or because of the vacation of a county road, making a street a cul-de-sac.²⁵

Taxation and assessment. A municipal corporation will not be held to have abandoned a street by reason of the fact that it has assessed the ground in the name of a private owner and collected taxes from him.²⁶

§ 1677. Statutory Provisions

General highway statutes which declare a highway vacated where it is not opened or used for a specified time have been held to be applicable in some, but not other, jurisdictions to streets, alleys, and other public places in municipalities.

While provisions in general highway statutes which declare a highway vacated which has not been opened or used within the time fixed have in some instances been held inapplicable to streets, alleys, or other public ways in municipalities,²⁷ they have, in other jurisdictions, been held applicable,²⁸ or have been held to apply where the municipal corporation has acquired merely an easement,²⁹ although inapplicable where it has acquired a fee,³⁰ and, where applicable, to repeal or modify previously granted municipal charters in so far as inconsistent with their provisions.³¹ A statute applying to every road "laid out and dedicated" applies to roads which have been dedicated by the owner as well as those laid out in adversary proceedings.³²

Highways incorporated within municipal limits. A statute of the character under consideration, where it is construed to except,³³ or where it expressly excepts,³⁴ streets and alleys in municipal corporations, is not applicable to a highway which is laid out in territory which is afterward, and before the expiration of the statutory period, brought within the corporate limits of the municipality.

Opening and user. Statutes of this character do not apply where the way while not free from obstruction is in fact open for use and used by the public.³⁵ In order to constitute use as a street so as to prevent its termination through nonuser, it has been held that travel must proceed in reasonably normal forms along the lines of an existing street.³⁶ Travel by pedestrians,³⁷ as by means of an unobstructed sidewalk,³⁸ may preserve a highway, although vehicles are barred. Obstructions of a street narrowing it and not closing the lines of travel will not put an end to its existence.³⁹

On the other hand, where a strip of land along the line of a street has been acquired to widen it, a failure to work or travel such strip for the statutory period may amount to an abandonment.⁴⁰ Where the entire width of the street is blocked, the obstructed section ceases to be a highway, even though other sections are unobstructed,⁴¹ and when a road is laid out as an entirety and only a part opened and worked and the remainder remains entirely closed, the public loses its rights after the statutory period.⁴² In order to constitute travel and use within a charter provision there must be substantial travel or substantial use as a street,⁴³ but light and occasional travel in connection with acts on the part of the municipal corporation recognizing and treating the way as a street will be sufficient.⁴⁴ Although a street may be regarded as a county road, and as such within the provisions of a statute relating to such roads, it falls within the interpretation of such a statute that a road cannot be regarded as unopened or unused where the country through which it lies is open and unobstructed at the time it was authorized and established.⁴⁵

Streets platted by owner. A statute providing that, where a street or alley has been laid out by the owner on a plat but has not been opened to, or used by, the public for a specified period thereafter, it may not then be opened without the consent of the owner, has been held to have no retroactive effect.⁴⁶ It applies only to unused streets,⁴⁷ and either a technical opening of the street or the fact of public user is sufficient to remove the street from the operation of the statute.⁴⁸ So the statute does not apply where the street has been opened for a part of its width and used as such,⁴⁹ but it does apply where during the entire period the bed of the street has been in the possession of the abutting owners and used for the purpose of quarrying stone.⁵⁰ A statute providing that, when any road shown on a plat shall have remained unopened and unused for a specified period, the right to have it opened as a public street shall cease, applies to the whole of the street shown and does not apply when any part of the street is used.⁵¹

6. DETERMINATION OF EXISTENCE OR LOCATION

§ 1678. In General

General rules as to parties have been applied in proceedings to determine the location or existence of a street.

General rules as to parties have been applied in proceedings to determine the location or existence of a street.⁵² If a suit is instituted by an individual to establish title to and recover land claimed to be a street, both the city and the people of the state need not be made parties in order that the judgment may be binding on the public,⁵³ nor is it necessary in an action to establish the existence of a public street that the people of the state and city should join as plaintiffs.⁵⁴

§ 1679. Pleadings as to Existence of Street or Other Public Way

The existence of a street may be pleaded without referring to the mode of its establishment.

The existence of a street may be pleaded without referring to the mode of its establishment⁵⁵ and without allegation of matters of defense,⁵⁶ but, if pleaded as established in one way, proof is not admissible to show its establishment in another.⁵⁷ The pleading must be definite and certain,⁵⁸ but reasonable certainty is sufficient.⁵⁹ The proof must correspond with the allegations and be confined to the point in issue.⁶⁰ Under a general denial of an allegation that a particular street was a highway, any evidence tending to disprove the allegation may be admitted,⁶¹ and a deed purporting to vacate it in accordance with a statutory provision is admissible.⁶²

a. Burden of Proof

The burden of proof as to the existence or location of a street generally rests on the party having the affirmative of the issue as determined by the pleadings or the nature of the investigation.

or location of a street or alley rests on the party having the affirmative of the issue as determined by the pleadings or the nature of the investigation.⁶³ This rule, for example, has been applied to the burden of showing that the street was not properly opened,⁶⁴ that a street has been vacated,⁶⁵ discontinued,⁶⁶ or abandoned,⁶⁷ the proper location of street lines,⁶⁸ and the acquisition of property as a street by adverse possession,⁶⁹ including the date at which occupancy began.⁷⁰ So, where uncontested possession to a particular line which corresponds to other lines on the survey is shown, the burden is on the opposite party to establish that the line is not the correct one.⁷¹ An owner asserting that public user was permissive has the burden of proof.⁷²

b. Presumptions

A street once in existence is presumed to continue.

Under the general rules as to presumptions, a street once in existence is presumed to continue,⁷³ and, under the rule as to the presumption of regularity of official proceedings and acts, it may be presumed that a street dedicated and used has been accepted,⁷⁴ that a street was not widened before it was legally authorized,⁷⁵ that railroad companies holding a fee in a strip in the center of a street had either voluntarily relinquished it or had received compensation therefor,⁷⁶ and that a street used by the public for five years is one of the public streets of the municipality.⁷⁷ A continued and uninterrupted use of land for a highway for the statutory period, in the absence of proof to the contrary, will be presumed to have been under a claim of right.⁷⁸ Where the acts establishing a highway evidence a general intention that it shall be of a certain width but permit the commissioners in their discretion to make it of less width at particular points, it cannot be presumed that it was laid out to the full width at any particular place.⁷⁹ Proof of the work done on a street by the municipality, together with evidence of user by the public, is sufficient to establish a presumption that it is a public street.⁸⁰

c. Admissibility

As a general rule, any competent evidence which tends to show that a highway is a public street is admissible to prove its existence.

As a general rule, any evidence, otherwise competent, which tends to show that a highway is called, or used or recognized as, a public street is admissible to prove its existence,⁸¹ and the introduction of a plat or other documentary evidence that it has been legally laid out and opened⁸² or that it has been established by dedication⁸³ or prescription⁸⁴ is unnecessary. However, the legal existence of a highway may not be proved by the conclusion of a witness.⁸⁵ Evidence to establish a

Defective resolutions

Where there was no proof that a resolution of common council was approved by mayor or that requisite number of street commissioners approved a resolution for change of grade, resolutions of council and street commissioners were admissible on question whether streets in question were public streets with grades established by user, acquiescence, and recognition, but resolutions could not be regarded as establishing grade of streets.—Cook v. prescriptive right must be relevant⁸⁶ and otherwise competent.⁸⁷ General understanding of the community, accompanying user, is admissible to show establishment.⁸⁸ On an issue as to the width of a street, evidence as to its breadth as it was actually opened many years before, with the assent of all the parties interested, is admissible.⁸⁹ Where the order of confirmation describes a street as of a certain width and the record of the viewers is in variance therewith, evidence may be admitted to show the width at which the street was actually opened.⁹⁰

Documents and records. Documentary evidence may be admissible;⁹¹ and, although title is not involved, deeds, plats, and maps are admissible to show the extent of defendant's possession.⁹² Records of proceedings establishing the streets, although defective or void, are admissible as evidence of the existence of a street by prescription⁹³ and to show color of title and the extent of the claim of the public;⁹⁴ but an ordinance dependent for vitality on the acceptance by the landowner is not admissible in the absence of proof of acceptance.⁹⁵ In an action between lot owners and the city involving the location of a street line, the files of another suit between the city and another property owner concerning the same question are not admissible.⁹⁶

Acts of city. Acts of a city or town, such as the making of repairs or using a highway for municipal improvements, may be evidence of the existence of a public highway.⁹⁷ So acts of the taxing officers of the city may properly be considered as circumstances in connection with all the other facts in evidence on the issue of whether the public user was permissive or hostile and adverse,⁹⁸ and evidence is admissible that the land had not been taxed on the ground that it was a highway.⁹⁹ However, in an action by a city to recover the cost of an original paving of a street, defendant may not show, as evidence of the adoption of the street as a paved street prior to the paving, that the city officials had relieved the contractor of the burden of collecting the assessment bills, and had paid to him directly the entire cost of the work,¹ nor may defendant show, in the absence of formal action by the city, as evidence of adoption, that the road had sidewalks and curbs,² that it was lighted,³ had police protection,⁴ or gas and water service,⁵ or garbage and ash collections,⁶ or that its grade had been changed by the city to conform with the grade of intersecting streets.⁷

Proceedings to perpetuate evidence. Evidence taken by a city in proceedings to perpetuate the evidence of the single witness who is competent to prove its plan may be admissible in subsequent proceedings, notwithstanding there is no individual whose interest it was to oppose the action of the municipal authorities.⁸

d. Weight and Sufficiency

General rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence have been applied to evidence as to the existence or location of a street.

the grading of a street has been neglected will not contradict evidence tending to show that the street is a public highway.¹⁰ The lines originally established are, unless duly changed by legal proceedings,¹¹ conclusive evidence as against both the public and the abutter,¹² provided the public has not acquired additional width by continuous, adverse, and exclusive use for the requisite period to establish its easement.¹³ An ordinance establishing the street is only prima facie evidence that it was established for public use as such, and the fact may be shown to be otherwise.¹⁴ Street signs placed on a proposed street and the appearance of its name in a directory made by the police department and on a tax plat are of small importance to prove the right of the public therein,¹⁵ but the facts that a street was named, that houses fronted on it and were numbered, and that a gas company was having gas pipes laid under it, are sufficient to show that it is a public street.¹⁶ Where there is a plan of lots showing the streets and alleys, a reference to a street in subsequent deeds as a public highway is proper, notwithstanding it was not accepted by the municipality, but is no evidence that it was such prior to the dedication.¹⁷ Failure to reserve the right of a street in a conveyance of lots is not conclusive proof that no street exists,¹⁸ and the plat of a survey to locate the line of a street is not evidence of the non-existence of a prescriptive alley running off from such street.¹⁹

An award of damages to abutting owners is not of itself sufficient to prove the existence of a street.²⁰ A proceeding to acquire the right to use land for a street has been held to be an admission that no previous right to such use existed,²¹ but the acceptance of a dedication of the fee does not admit that there was no street by prescription before the dedication.²²

7. TITLE AND OWNERSHIP, USE OF SOIL AND MATERIAL, AND PROTECTION OF INTERESTS

§ 1681. In General

Except as the rule may be affected by statute, it is commonly held that the fee in a street or public way remains in the abutting owner subject to the easement acquired by the public.

Where there is a statute relating thereto, the right or estate of a municipal corporation to land acquired for street purposes is governed thereby.²³ Giving due regard to the circumstances of the ac-

Civil law

Under the civil law, it has been stated, the title to the fee of a public road is in the government.—Dunham v. Williams, 37 N.Y. 251, 4 Transc.A. 209—44 C.J. p 915 note 14.

Dutch law

The ownership of the fee of roads established during the Dutch occupancy of New York was governed by the Dutch law, which vested it in the sovereign; but this rule did not apply after the British assumed sovereignty, and the fee of a street opened thereafter did not vest in the British crown by reason there-

quisition of a street or other public way by a municipality, it is commonly held, apart from statute, that the public or municipality does not acquire a fee therein;²⁴ but the fee remains in the abutting owner,²⁵ or in the original proprietor or dedicator

or one claiming under him.²⁶ Under this rule, the public or the municipality acquires only an easement;²⁷ and the fee is held subject to such easement,²⁸ and to a legitimate use by the municipality.²⁹

On the other hand, it has been held, under or apart from statutes relating to the establishment of streets, that the fee to a street may be vested in the municipality.³⁰ Thus, under some statutes so providing, as a result of the platting of a municipal site, the municipality may acquire a fee to the streets;³¹ but it does not acquire the fee where the plat is merely a common-law plat,³² or where the plat is made under a statute which does not effect a change in the common-law rule.³³

Grants to a municipality by individual owners,³⁴ or by the state,³⁵ or other sovereign,³⁶ have been recognized or upheld as a grant of the fee; but a grant from the state does not necessarily convey a fee to the municipality.³⁷ Even where the fee vests in the municipality, the public acquires only an easement.³⁸ Where the municipality acquires fee title to the streets, abutting property owners have no interests therein other than those of the general public.³⁹ The grantees under a deed particularly describing the land as beginning at an intersection of designated streets are estopped thereby from denying the rights of the city in and to such streets.⁴⁰

As considered in Boundaries § 35, where an abutting owner owns the fee of a street, a grant or conveyance of the land abutting on such street carries the fee in the street to the center thereof, where the surrounding circumstances do not indicate a contrary intent; but the rule has been held not to apply to conveyances by a municipality of land, owned by it in fee, abutting the street, as discussed in Boundaries § 37.

Fee in state or county. In some jurisdictions it has been held that the fee to a street vests in the state⁴¹ or county,⁴² the city being merely trustee thereof, as discussed infra § 1682; and it has been held, under provisions so construed, that the city does not have an irrevocable grant or a fee simple, but the property is merely committed to the city during the pleasure of the state,⁴³ the title so granted being subject to withdrawal, modification, or transfer to another governmental agency by legislative action.⁴⁴ street,⁴⁶ and that the public has only an easement,⁴⁷ are commonly indulged, in some instances under statutes expressly so providing.⁴⁸ The circumstances may be such as to give rise to a presumption that the abutting owner has the fee to the entire street.⁴⁹ These presumptions may be rebutted,⁵⁰ and this is sometimes made the rule by statute.⁵¹ These presumptions do not arise in respect of the owner of certain property where there is no evidence that such property extends to, or is bounded by, the street in question;⁵² and there has been a refusal to indulge the presumption that the abutting owner owns the fee where no relief is sought because of ownership of the fee.⁵³ In some jurisdictions in which by virtue of statute the municipality commonly acquires or has acquired a fee, it is presumed that the fee is in the municipality.⁵⁴

Title to, or ownership of, easement. While the view has been taken that the title to the easement may vest in the state or in the municipality,⁵⁵ it has also been stated that the municipality does not even own the easement.⁵⁶

Street improvements made with public funds do not belong to the abutting owner, but inhere to the street improved.⁵⁷

§ 1682. Extent and Nature of Title or Fee

The title of an abutting owner ordinarily extends to the middle of the street; the public easement goes to the full length and width of the street and extends indefinitely upward and downward. The fee or easement in the municipal corporation is held in trust for the public, and the municipality ordinarily cannot sell or barter the streets.

Fenced in by grantees

Fact that "street," referred to in city's deeds of adjoining tracts, was never opened or used and had been fenced by grantees for years, does not affect question whether town or grantees own fee therein, since city is not required to open all "streets," but may hold the land in reserve for street use.—Town of Refugio v. Strauch, supra.

Rights as of private owner

City's rights as owner of land, referred to as "street" in deeds and oil lease executed by it, but located two miles from inhabited portion of city, were the same as those of private owner, except as to duty to keep it self in position to use land for public benefit when necessary.—Town of Refugio v. tie to the whole street is sometimes in the abutting owner on one side;⁶⁰ and, where the abutting owner who has title to a street has land on both sides of a particular part of the street, his title extends to the whole of such part.⁶¹

The public right to the use of a street goes to the full length and width of the street and extends indefinitely upward and downward,⁶² and includes the sidewalks.⁶³

The title or estate of a municipal corporation in a street or other public way may depend on the circumstances of the acquisition thereof.⁶⁴ In some instances, the fee acquired by the municipality has been characterized as a qualified, base, or determinable fee;⁶⁵ but in others the fee acquired by the municipality has been held to be of a higher nature.⁶⁶ In some jurisdictions, even where the fee is in the municipality, every beneficial use except that for street purposes remains in the original dedicant or proprietor or his grantee.⁶⁷

Right to control street as legal or equitable.

Where the abutting owner retains the fee, the right of the municipality to the possession, use, and control of the street is regarded as a legal, and not a mere equitable, right.⁶⁸

Title in trust; right of disposition. The title to the street, whether a fee or an easement, is held in trust for, or for the benefit of, the public;⁶⁹ and some statutes contain a specific provision to that effect.⁷⁰ The public for whose benefit the streets are held is the general public or the people of the state.⁷¹ It follows that title to streets is held by the municipality in its public or governmental capacity

Porterie v. Housing Authority of New Orleans, 182 So. 725, 190 La. 710.

(2) A city had statutory authority to convey by deed to United States reclamation bureau a portion of city street crossing a canal belonging to bureau, reserving right to use bridge over canal as part of city street system.—City of El Paso v. Mendoza, Tex.Civ.App., 191 S.W.2d 102, error refused for want of merit.

does it ordinarily have the power to divert streets or alleys from the uses to which they were dedicated, or pervert them to other uses, as considered supra § 1655. However, a municipality may in some instances dispose of a street after it has been lawfully vacated, as considered infra § 1683 b; and, where a municipal corporation has acquired the absolute title to land for a street and such use becomes impossible, such corporation may alienate the land for its full value,⁷⁵ or it may sell any surplus of land acquired for street purposes.⁷⁶ A city cannot be divested of its title except in the manner provided by statute;⁷⁷ and a municipal corporation does not lose title to its streets by failure to elect municipal officers, even though such failure should continue for a number of years.⁷⁸

§ 1683. Effect of Vacation and Abandonment

a. In general

Statute construed to grant authority

(1) Charter amendment providing that mayor and councilmen were authorized to lay out, establish, change, alter, transfer and convey, straighten, or improve streets, whenever necessary to best interest of town, authorized mayor and councilmen to sell certain street in town, in absence of showing that closing of street was contrary to best interest of town.—Vandiviere v. Anderson, 42 S.E.2d 449, 202 Ga. 142.

(2) Statute permitting municipalities to exchange property with landowners so that new streets may be "laid out" was held applicable to widening of existing street; and the fact that street which city gave landowner in exchange for landowner's property was necessary for public, because city reserved sewerage and water main rights, was held not to invalidate exchange, since due reservation had been made to the extent necessary.—Wilkie v. Walmsley, 136 So. 296, 173 La. 141.

Rights of action

Lot owners in a municipal subdivision were not precluded from recovery in suit against state road department to compel department, which had entered subdivision without owners' consent and removed sidewalk and builder's sand while rebuilding a highway, to restore property to original condition or prosecute condemnation proceedings on ground that streets had been dedicated to the public by a plat filed and recorded for such purpose in public records of the county, where evidence showed that streets had been abandoned.—*State Road Department v. c. Effect on easements or right of access

a. In General

Ordinarily, in the absence of statute affecting the rule, on vacation or abandonment of a street, title, free from the public easement, remains in, or reverts to, the owner of the fee.

Ordinarily, on the vacation or abandonment of a street, the title to the land, free from the public easement, remains in, or reverts to, the owner of the fee.⁷⁹ Thus, where the abutting owner is the owner of the fee, he becomes entitled to the absolute ownership of the part of the vacated or abandoned street in which he has the fee, discharged from the public easement,⁸⁰ notwithstanding the existence of structures lying below the surface.⁸¹ In the absence of statutory provisions affecting the

Grantee of abutting property

(1) Where land bounded on a street is conveyed without reservation, and thereafter the street is vacated, the land reverts to the grantee discharged of the easement.—Brown v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 102 P. 740, 38 Utah 257, 24 L.R.A., N.S., 86—9 C.J. p 204 note 33.

(2) Since the conveyance by which the abutting owner acquires title is subject only to the public easement, when the easement is abandoned or otherwise terminated, the title, with all the incidents of ownership, becomes perfect in the adjacent lot owner.—Sullivan v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 95 N.E. 1081, 251 Ill. 108, 118—9 C.J. p 204 note 34.

(3) Grantor of lots could not be compelled to reopen street, title to center of which had, on abandonment of street, vested in grantees.—Avondale Heights Co. v. Rhodes, 3 S.W.2d 774, 228 Ky. 409.

rule, the municipality retains no rights in the property.⁸² On the other hand, where the fee is in the municipality, ordinarily it remains with it after vacation or abandonment,⁸³ and no interest therein reverts to, or vests in, the abutting owner.⁸⁴ However, where the fee which the municipality has acquired is regarded as a base, qualified, or determinable fee, as considered supra § 1682, in some jurisdictions it vests in the abutting owners,⁸⁵ at least in the absence of a statute to the contrary, while in others it has been held that it vests in the dedicator or the owner of the land when the street was established or in the persons who represent him as such dedicator or proprietor.⁸⁶

Before one can acquire title to property in a street by virtue of an abandonment, there must be a showing of a lawful abandonment.⁸⁷ An ordinance requiring the elevation of railroad tracks in a street is not necessarily a vacation in the sense that a reversion or vesting of the fee results,⁸⁸ but, where compliance with such an ordinance results in a complete obstruction of the street for the ordinary and usual purpose of a street, the ordinance effects such a vacation as will result in such reversion or vesting.⁸⁹

In an action by an abutting owner against a municipality to quiet title to a vacated street, the municipality may not urge reversion to the original grantors, where they are not parties to the action.⁹⁰

Statutory provisions. Under statutes so providing, on the vacation of a street the fee reverts to, or vests in, the owners of the abutting property.⁹¹

Reappropriation of property

(1) County having abandoned property for street originally dedicated to it was without authority to appropriate property without new dedication from landowner to whom it reverted, and was liable to landowner for appropriation of abandoned property.—McLennan County v. Taylor, supra.

(2) Where city abandoned easement in property for street purposes, it could not thereafter reopen street without compensating railroad owning property on each side of street before abandonment, even though depot for which street was abandoned had been removed.—City of Flint v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co., C.C.A.Mich., 69 F.2d 604.

(3) Where a road had been opened up and used by a few people and later abandoned and had not been used for a number of years as a road, but had been in the possession of defendant, it was held that the city would be denied an injunction prohibiting defendant from the use of the road for, if it was necessary to open the road, it should bring an action to acquire it by eminent domain.—City of Knoxville v. Statute held valid

Statute is not invalid as authorizing the taking of property of dedicator without due process by providing that ownership shall revert to the then present owners of land contiguous to such road, street, or alley, since land dedicated to public use under statute vests the title to the property in the public as against contention that public had but a servitude on the streets and alleys which on abandonment reverted to the dedicator.—Arkansas-Louisiana Gas Co. v. Parker Oil Co., 183 So. 229, 190 La. 957.

Statute held to embody common-law rule

Or.—Fowler v. Gehrke, 111 P.2d 831, 166 Or. 239.

Limited to unincorporated areas

When streets as laid out on plat of townsite were vacated, under statute concerning vesting of title on vacation of streets in unincorporated areas and municipalities not exercising their corporate functions, the title of owner of a block bounded by streets was extended to center of streets, as far as they adjoined and were in front of block.—Fowler v. Gehrke, supra.

Accretion to abutting lot

It has been held that the part of the street which so passes to an abutting owner becomes a part of his lot which passes under a conveyance in which the lots are described as originally platted.

U.S.—Roxana Petroleum Corporation v. Sutter, C.C.A.Kan., 28 F.2d 159.

44 C.J. p 918 note 54 [a] (1).

However, under some statutes this rule is subject to the limitation that vested rights shall not be affected.⁹² Under certain of such statutes a proportionate part of the street does not necessarily become a part of each abutting lot,⁹³ and, under an express exception to that effect, where the street was taken and appropriated to public use in different proportions, it will revert to the adjacent lots in proportion as it was taken from them,⁹⁴ so that one whose grantor dedicated the entire street is, on subsequent vacation thereof, entitled to the entire width thereof to the exclusion of the opposite owner.⁹⁵ By reason of a specific charter provision the fee sometimes remains in the city notwithstanding the vacation of the street;⁹⁶ and it has been held that a statute providing that the abutting owners should become seized in fee of a vacated street is not effective to divest the municipality of its fee in such street.⁹⁷

On vacation of a street, under some statutes the land reverts to the dedicator or his grantees.⁹⁸ Under statutes providing that platted streets shall belong to the original proprietors or the present owners of the abutting lots on due vacation of a statutory dedication, platted streets which have not become public streets become the property of the original proprietors or the present owners.⁹⁹ Under statutory provision to that effect, on vacation of an alley and its reversion to the abutting owners, they take title thereto subject as a matter of law to the right of the city to reopen the alley without cost to the city.¹ Under some statutes the owner of the fee of a street which has been opened and in use can inclose or occupy the vacated part when,² and only when,³ another street bounding the block in question is open and in use.

Statutory provisions of this nature must, of course, be followed in order that the rights contemplated by the statute may be obtained.⁴

Surface to which title extends. Because of the general rule that, where the fee of a street is in the abutting owners, each owns to the middle thereof, as discussed supra § 1682, ordinarily the abutting owner on abandonment or vacation is entitled to one half of the original street in front of his property,⁵ and this rule has been applied where there was a vacation of more than half, but less than the whole, street,⁶ with the result that property on the side on which the vacation occurred no longer abutted on the street;⁷ but, if an abutting owner's title which is subject to the public easement extends beyond the middle of the street, on vacation or abandonment he is entitled to the land to which he has title.⁸

Conveyance to person entitled. Where title vests by operation of law, no deed from the municipality to abutting owners is necessary;⁹ and a statement, in a declaratory resolution vacating a portion of a street, that the vacated property should revert to a certain person is mere surplusage, and does not convey the property.¹⁰

b. Disposal of Vacated Street by Municipality

After vacation of a street to which a municipal corporation holds title, it may use or permit the land to be used for any authorized purpose, and may even alienate the property.

Where a municipal corporation holds title to the fee of a street, on a vacation it may use or permit the land to be used for any purpose authorized by law,¹¹ especially where the statute authorizes the vacation of streets and the disposition of the land as the authorities shall direct;¹² or it may grant the land for private ownership.¹³ Accordingly, after a street has been lawfully vacated, the property may be sold under a general power of alienation of municipal property;¹⁴ and where, by its charter, a city has authority to open, lay out, widen, straighten, or otherwise change streets in the city, it may vacate and sell to an abutting owner a part of a street, where the selling and closing of the tract will straighten and make more uniform in width the street from which the tract is taken, without closing or preventing the free use of such street by the public.¹⁵

Fee not in municipality. A conveyance by a municipal corporation of a vacated street, the fee of which is in another, does not transfer title;¹⁶ and the right of an abutting owner to one half of the original street in front of his property cannot be divested by an agreement between the city and a third person giving the third person the right to continue the use of the abandoned street.¹⁷

c. Effect on Easements or Right of Access

Generally, vacation or abandonment of a street does not necessarily extinguish private rights or easements in the street in the absence of statute providing therefor.

While municipal corporations may close public streets as provided by law or by their charters and extinguish the public right of way, as discussed supra § 1673, it is usually held that the vacation or abandonment of a street does not necessarily extinguish property owners' private rights or easements in the street in the absence of a valid statutory provision for such extinguishment.¹⁸ Accordingly, where such rights or easements survive vacation or abandonment, a person who has title to a vacated portion of the street holds the property subject to such rights or easements;¹⁹ and it has been held that, where a street reverts to the owner of the fee on vacation, it is accompanied by the burden of the abutting property.²⁰

Obviously these rules are not applicable where a private easement distinct from, and independent of, the public right does not exist at the time the street is vacated or abandoned, and in such case the property owner has no such easement after vacation or abandonment.²¹ Moreover, the various jurisdictions are not in agreement with respect to the contemporaneous existence of public and private rights in a street and to the effect of vacation or abandonment.²² In some jurisdictions the view is taken that dedication to a public use renders inconsistent

Sufficiency of access; enjoining obstruction

(1) The obstruction of a vacated alley by abutting lot owner to whom vacated portion reverts may be enjoined by an owner of property on the alley not abutting the vacated portion, although owner may have access thereto over the street on which it fronts, but to entitle him to such relief, the inconvenience he suffers must be different in kind from that of general public and not one in degree; and he has no right to enjoin the obstruction of the vacated portion by owners to whom it reverted when he has reasonable access to his property by other streets and alleys, although the distance he may have to travel in some directions may be greater than before the vacation.—Bulen v. Moody, 63 N.E.2d 916, 77 Ohio App. 61.

(2) In determining whether non-abutting property owner still had reasonable access to her property after alley had been vacated by city council, proof that another alley which afforded ingress and egress to and from plaintiff's property was less than twelve feet in width did not establish that such alley was too narrow to be of any practical value, in view of statute fixing maximum width of vehicles using highway at eight feet.—Bulen v. Moody, supra.

the continued and contemporaneous existence of a private right of way independent of the public right, and that there is, therefore, no such private right after vacation.²³ It has been held that a county court as the owner of a bridge rendered useless by the vacation of a street is not an abutting owner entitled to an easement in the land constituting the locus of the vacated street.²⁴

Statutes extinguishing all easements. Under some statutes so providing, all public and private easements are extinguished as a result of the vacation of streets in accordance with the statutes.²⁵

§ 1684. Soil and Other Material

Title to the fee of a street extends to the soil and generally includes material in the street which is a part of, or is attached to, the soil.

Where the abutting owner has title to the street, his ownership extends to the soil,²⁶ and includes, as a general rule, material in the street which is a part of, or is attached to, the soil;²⁷ and this ownership is not divested by the mere act of the municipal corporation and contractors in excavating a street in order to improve it.²⁸ This ownership is subject to the public easement,²⁹ and to the right of the municipality to use the material needed to construct or to repair the street.³⁰ On the other hand, where the municipality or the governing body has acquired the fee of the street, title to the soil and other material is in the municipality³¹ or in the gov-

The question whether the materials used in paving a sidewalk belong to the municipality or to the abutting owners has been held to be dependent on the facts or circumstances of the particular case.³³ Thus, under certain circumstances, the materials with which sidewalks in municipalities are paved may belong to the abutting owner;³⁴ and, where he owns the fee of the street, it has been held that the materials belong to him.³⁵

Removal and use by municipality. The municipality may remove material in connection with improving or repairing a street;³⁶ and, where it has thus removed material as a necessary part of the improvement, it may use such material for improving or repairing the street,³⁷ even at places other than that from which such material was removed,³⁸ and even though the fee of the street is not in the municipality.³⁹ The municipality may not remove or use the soil or other material except for the purposes indicated above;⁴⁰ it must use only such material as it is reasonable to use;⁴¹ and, according to some decisions, it may remove and use only material, the removal of which is necessarily required in the process of construction or repair.⁴² There is authority for the view that the materials removed may be used in improving or repairing streets other than the street on which the abutting owner affected lives,⁴³ at least if the improvement of the two streets is embraced in one and the same general plan of improvement;⁴⁴ but there is also authority to the contrary.⁴⁵ It has been held that a municipality has the right to use old discarded paving material for which other material has been substituted whether the municipality owns the fee or merely an easement in the street,⁴⁶ and even though paid for by taxation on benefits to adjacent property;⁴⁷ but the municipality has no authority to remove paving material located in front of certain property and to use it elsewhere merely because of the abutting owner's failure to pay an assessment therefor, where title to such material is in such owner;⁴⁸ and it has been held that the municipality has no right to remove a plank sidewalk laid at the expense of the municipality on the ground that it is the private property of the municipality, regardless of where the fee of the street resides.⁴⁹ Where the abutting owner does not want the soil necessarily removed in the improvement of a street, the right of the municipality to sell it has been recognized;⁵⁰ and soil and earth taken off for grading may be sold and the value thereof recovered from the purchaser.⁵¹

Removal and use by property owner. The view is usually taken that an abutting owner has no right, notwithstanding his ownership of the fee of the street, to remove the soil or minerals for his own use;⁵² and the possibility of a reverter of the fee does not give the abutting owner the right to take materials from the street.⁵³ However, the abutting owner who owns the fee is entitled to material excavated by the municipality or a contractor, which is not used in the improvement or repair of streets,⁵⁴ provided he makes his claim therefor,⁵⁵ or removes it,⁵⁶ in due season. In some jurisdictions it has been held that the abutting owner has the right of removal,⁵⁷ provided there is no interference with the public use of the street.⁵⁸ While the view has been taken that the abutting owner cannot compel the municipality to remove surplus materials to a place designated by such owner,⁵⁹ according to some decisions, where an abutting owner is entitled to surplus soil or other material, he is entitled to the delivery of such material at some convenient place;⁶⁰ but the municipality or a contractor cannot be required to deliver the surplus material at some remote or inconvenient place.⁶¹ It has been held that, where the title of the soil of the street is in the municipality, a contract of a lot owner with the municipality by which the latter is to pave the street and to place the material coming out of the street on the property of the lot owner is illegal;⁶² but an agreement by a municipality that a person who owns property on both sides of the street and who also owns the fee of the street can remove the stone in the street and dispose of it is sufficient consideration for the agreement of such person to grade the street to the established grade.⁶³

Removal and use by contractor or other third persons. Where the title to the street is in the abutting owners, the municipal authorities have no power to confer on a third person the right to take soil from the street for his use against the objections of the abutting owners.⁶⁴ Similarly, a third person has no right to take minerals from beneath a street, where the title to the street is in the municipality, without the consent of the municipality.⁶⁵ The right of a contractor to remove materials which he has used in improving a street has been upheld where he has not been paid for such improvement, and they may be removed without material injury to the street and to the abutting property owner.⁶⁶ Moreover, a contractor may make a specified use of material taken from the street where the municipality is authorized so to use the material;⁶⁷ but the contractor may not make such use of material as the municipality is not authorized to make.⁶⁸ The contractor may make a binding agreement with the abutting owner to pay for material removed from the street.⁶⁹

Remedies. Where an abutting owner is the owner of the fee of a street, he may sue for a wrongful injury to, or removal of, the soil or other material.⁷⁰ Moreover, where it is the duty of a property owner to lay a sidewalk and to maintain it in good condition, he has a cause of action against the person through whose negligence the sidewalk is injured;⁷¹ and it has been held that, regardless of who has the fee of the street, an abutting owner may have such an interest in a sidewalk as will support an action for its wrongful removal.⁷² The right of action may be enforced against the municipality where it is chargeable with the wrongful act;⁷³ but the abutting owner is not entitled to restrain the municipal authorities from collecting an assessment for an improvement beyond the actual expense of constructing such improvement after deducting the value of material which the contractor had taken and appropriated to his own use.⁷⁴

Actions by the municipality⁷⁵ or by the governing body,⁷⁶ based on the wrongful removal of materials from the street, have been upheld where title to the street is in the municipality or in the governing body. An injunction will not issue on a bill in equity brought by a municipality to enjoin the removal of minerals underlying a street on the ground that such removal would cause subsidence of the surface, to the injury of the street and the peril of the traveling public, where it appears that the surface had been sold without the right of support and that the possibility of injury is very remote.⁷⁷

Trees in the street belong to the owner of the fee of the street, and an action for damages for their destruction may be maintained; but the interest of an abutting owner in trees is subservient to the public right.

Trees in the street belong to the abutting owner where he is the owner of the fee,⁷⁸ unless, according to some decisions, they have been planted by the public authorities.⁷⁹ Similarly, where the municipality owns the fee of a street, it is ordinarily the owner of trees therein.⁸⁰ The reservation in a deed of land for highway purposes of the trees on such land has been given effect.⁸¹

As a general rule the right of an abutting owner to plant and maintain trees in front of his land within the street is recognized where there is no interference with the public use of the street,⁸² even though such owner is not the owner of the fee of the street.⁸³ It has been held that an abutting owner does not have a true servitude in shade trees planted between the sidewalk and the curb in front of his property, but has a right in the nature of an easement.⁸⁴ In any event, his title to, or interest in, trees in the street is subservient to the public right,⁸⁵ and to the power of the municipality to regulate and control such trees, as discussed infra §

1693. Trees on a sidewalk may be an unlawful obstruction,⁸⁶ but shade trees are not a nuisance per se, and only become such when they obstruct or interfere with the use of the highway or street.⁸⁷

An abutting owner who owns trees in the street may use whatever force is necessary to protect them from injury.⁸⁸ Ordinarily, the abutting owner has the right to remove a tree at his pleasure,⁸⁹ at least, where, the abutting owner owns the fee of the street,⁹⁰ provided he does not thereby violate a statute or ordinance forbidding or regulating such removal;⁹¹ but it has also been held that the action of an abutting owner in cutting down trees in front of his property constitutes a trespass and wanton disregard of the proprietary rights of the municipality and the public,⁹² and renders him liable to the municipality in damages.⁹³ There is a duty of mutual accommodation between an abutting owner who has an interest in trees in the street and one who is authorized to string wires in the same street.⁹⁴

Liability of abutting owner. An abutting owner who owns a tree in the street may be liable for injuries resulting from his failure properly to maintain it;⁹⁵ but in the absence of a showing that the abutting owner planted the tree, or that it was his duty to maintain it, he cannot be held liable.⁹⁶

Remedies of abutting owners. Abutting owners who have a property right in trees in a street or in maintaining them,⁹⁷ as where they own the fee of the street,⁹⁸ or, although they do not own the fee of the street, have, in the exercise of a right, planted or maintained the trees,⁹⁹ or have the right of enjoyment of the trees,¹ have a right of action for a wrongful injury to, or the negligent or unnecessary destruction of, such trees. The right to enforce by action the liability of the municipality where it is chargeable with the wrongful act has been recognized or upheld;² and the municipality and a contractor who is doing work for the municipality may be jointly liable.³ Public utility or service companies which wrongfully injure or destroy trees are liable for the damages inflicted;⁴ but a public service corporation may, in case of necessity, trim and cut trees in the street without liability to abutting owners.⁵

Where the abutting owner has a property interest in the trees, he may obtain an injunction against one who threatens wrongful destruction or injury,⁶ or against the municipality if it threatens to remove, destroy, or injure such trees in an oppressive exercise of its power over streets;⁷ but an injunction will not lie in respect of acts which are within the discretion of the municipal authorities.⁸

Rules governing proceedings in civil actions generally have been applied in actions by abutting owners relating to trees in the street.⁹ Thus, the burden of proving the facts on which his cause of action depends is on plaintiff.¹⁰ The facts may be such as to permit the recovery of punitive damages,¹¹ and by virtue of certain statutory provisions treble damages may be recovered.¹²

Remedies of municipality. The municipality has such an interest in trees in a street in front of property owned by the municipality that it may maintain an action for damages for their destruction.¹³ However, where a city is unable to show title to a tree in a highway easement superior to that of the abutting owner, it cannot maintain trespass against such owner, or one acting for the owner, for the removal of the tree.¹⁴

8. POWER TO CONTROL AND REGULATE

§ 1686. Power of State

The legislature, acting for the state, has primary and plenary power to control and regulate streets, and it may delegate such power to a municipal corporation.

Within federal and state constitutional limitations, the legislature as representative of the state has primary and plenary power to control and regulate streets in any way not inconsistent with their proper use.¹⁵ More specifically, it has been held that city streets are public highways, and as such

Highways see Highways § 232.
Motor vehicles see Motor Vehicles §§ 14–56.

Use of street as highway see infra §§ 1761–1774.

Exclusive jurisdiction

Legislature has exclusive jurisdiction to lodge control of roads of state in municipalities and to pre-subject to the primary control of the state legislature;¹⁶ and certainly city streets laid out under legislative enactment are public highways belonging to the state, and in the absence of constitutional limitations may be controlled directly by the state.¹⁷ This power of the legislature has been classified as part of the police power.¹⁸ The state may exercise its paramount authority over the streets whenever it sees fit, even though it has by silence acquiesced in municipal regulation thereof;¹⁹ but the state may be without the power of control where it has conferred such power on the municipalities.²⁰ The rule applies to a vehicular bridge²¹ or tunnel²² where such thoroughfare constitutes a part or extension of the street or highway.

Delegation of power. Within the limitations imposed by the state constitution, the legislature may delegate to a municipal corporation the control and regulation of its streets.²³

§ 1687. Power of Municipality

Ordinarily, under a grant of power from the state, a municipal corporation has power to control and regulate streets and highways within its limits, and to prescribe particular regulations and conditions governing their use.

While strictly speaking, a municipal corporation has no original or inherent power to control and reg-scribe rules as to exercise of such control.—Larson v. New England Tel. & Tel. Co., 44 A.2d 1, 141 Me. 326.

Power held not withdrawn

Home rule amendment of constitution does not withdraw from legislature power to enact general laws, or laws relating to municipal highways and affecting their public use.—City of Portland v. Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co., D.C.Or., 5 F. Supp. 79.

Control as residing in people

Control of state highways, including streets and alleys in incorporated cities, resides primarily in people, and may be exercised through initiative amendment to constitution or agency of state legislature.—City of Portland v. Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co., supra.

Aesthetic considerations

Legislature has power to regulate aesthetic considerations regarding public property.—Walnut & Quince Streets Corporation v. Mills, 151 A. 29, 303 Pa. 25, appeal dismissed 52 S.Ct. 16, 284 U.S. 573, 76 L.Ed. 498.

street purposes,²⁸ or the omission to enact proper by-laws.²⁹

Since the power of the municipal corporation is measured by the statute or charter provisions delegating such power,³⁰ the municipality must keep within the limits of the grant and cannot exercise power beyond what is necessary to facilitate travel.³¹ The power of the municipality to adopt regulations tending to promote the general welfare of the public in the use of the streets may rest on several grants of power by the legislature and need not be derived from one grant of power.³²

Construction and operation of grant of power.

The municipal power is frequently construed liberally so as to effect the object of the grant,³³ and will include the power to regulate streets as to new uses uncommon or unknown at the time the power was given,³⁴ and has often been construed as exclusive and plenary.³⁵ However, it has also been held that the delegated power to control and regulate the use of highways will be strictly construed.³⁶ The power conferred on a municipal corporation in a general statute to regulate the use of the streets must be construed in connection with the limitations expressed and implied in other statutes relating to the same subject matter.³⁷ Municipal ordinances must yield to conflicting legislative enactments.³⁸

Under a statute empowering a municipality to regulate the use of its streets, the grant of power is not limited to the mere right to put the thoroughfare in order for travel or keep it in repair, but authorizes such use of the streets as the public may require.³⁹ Thus it is for the municipal authorities to determine what use shall be made of the streets, that is, what proportion shall be used for roadway and what proportion for sidewalks.⁴⁰ The municipality may even close a street where that is necessary to the security of its travelers.⁴¹ Moreover, it is not only the right, but the imperative duty, of the municipality to make and enforce such regulations covering the use of its streets as will be for the convenience and protection of the public.⁴²

Implied power. A municipal power to control and regulate its streets may be implied from charter or constitutional provisions granting it general power of government;⁴³ and, when the state intrusts control of its highways to municipal agencies, the powers necessarily incident to their complete functioning are conferred by implication.⁴⁴ However, the fact that a city is charged with the duty of keeping its streets in repair and that the cost of maintaining them is raised by public taxation within the city does not give it control of its streets exclusive of that of the state.⁴⁵ The appropriation and use of a street for telephone poles and wires are a "municipal affair" within the meaning of constitutional provisions conferring on municipalities exclusive control of municipal affairs.⁴⁶

Particular ways subject to control. Public alleys are ordinarily as much under municipal control as a street;⁴⁷ and, where street improvements are made with public funds, such street is subject to the same control and dominion of the municipal corporation as was the case before the improvement was made.⁴⁸ So, also, where a railroad right of way has become an established street, it is subject to municipal regulations under the police power for the public benefit.⁴⁹ The power of control and regulation certainly applies to streets after they have been opened;⁵⁰ but it has also been held that the power of a municipality may apply to platted streets which have not yet been opened, used, or maintained as a street.⁵¹ Where roads outside the limits of a municipality and subject to the jurisdiction of the county board are subsequently included within the corporate limits of a municipality, the municipality succeeds to the right of the county board to regulate such streets consistent with other public uses.⁵² Any attempt by a municipality to retain control of streets after they have ceased to be within its limits is ultra vires and void.⁵³

Portion of street under control. A municipality ordinarily has power to control and regulate the entire length and breadth of the surface of its streets,⁵⁴ including sidewalks,⁵⁵ cartways,⁵⁶ and parkings,⁵⁷ and the space above and below the surface as far as any proper street use may require.⁵⁸ Its control does not, however, extend beyond the street line.⁵⁹

In whom power vested; delegation thereof. Ordinarily the power to control and regulate municipal streets is by charter or statute vested in the municipal governing body.⁶⁰ Over some spaces, such as the crossing of streets and boulevards, there may be double jurisdiction by separate boards or officers for distinct and different purposes.⁶¹

A municipal body vested with power to control and regulate streets cannot delegate to another its discretionary power with respect thereto,⁶² without the sanction of the state;⁶³ and assumption by another is invalid,⁶⁴ in the absence of estoppel or laches.⁶⁵ However, where control of a street is relinquished by a city to certain officers, who are not thereafter disturbed in their possession and the making of improvements for many years, their right is not subject to attack on the ground that the transfer by the city was informal.⁶⁶ A city council may delegate to a director of safety the power of granting permits for street meetings under conditions specified in the ordinance;⁶⁷ and, where a department of public parks has been given jurisdiction over a street, it may properly delegate such jurisdiction to the commissioner of public works as far as necessary to enable him to attend to the actual removal of an obstruction.⁶⁸

§ 1688. Relinquishment of Power

Power to control and regulate streets is in trust for the general public, and neither the state nor the municipal corporation can divest itself of this trust.

State or municipal power to control and regulate streets is in trust for the general public,⁶⁹ and not only for the people who live within the municipality, but also for all who come there;⁷⁰ and neither the state,⁷¹ nor the municipality,⁷² can divest itself of this trust. Accordingly, a contract by which the state or municipality surrenders its police power over the streets is invalid.⁷³ However, a municipality's power to regulate its streets is not lost by a compromise of litigation respecting title thereto,⁷⁴ or by grant of a franchise to a public utility,⁷⁵ or by an injunction restraining the city from interference therewith;⁷⁶ nor does a municipal corporation lose control of its streets by failure to elect municipal officers, even though such failure continues for a number of years.⁷⁷

§ 1689. Conflicting Powers

The state may revoke or reassume or delegate to another public agency the power granted to a municipal corporation to control its streets. Constitutional or statutory provisions will determine which of several boards or agencies shall have control, and whether the county or the municipal corporation shall have control of county roads within the municipal limits.

Where municipal power to control and regulate streets exists by virtue of legislative delegation, it is subject to the paramount authority of the state,⁷⁸

State's legislative authority favored

Doubt as to whether regulation of use of public street is municipal affair must be resolved in favor of state's legislative authority.—Key System Transit Co. v. City of Oakland, 13 P.2d 979, 124 Cal.App. 733.

which, within constitutional limitations, may revoke the grant and reassume it or delegate it to another public functionary or agency.⁷⁹ However, the legislative intent to revoke the grant, or to redelegate the control to another public agency, must clearly appear from the provisions of the legislative act relied on as doing either of those things;⁸⁰ and, where a subsequent statute is in conflict with the statute granting municipalities power to control their streets, only as much of the earlier statute will be held to have been repealed or revoked as is irreconcilable conflict with the subsequent statute.⁸¹

Accordingly, state statutes delegating to other agencies power to control and regulate rates and service of public utilities,⁸² to construct and maintain streets,⁸³ to supervise street and interurban railways,⁸⁴ or to regulate any other matter not affecting general control of streets,⁸⁵ do not revoke

the general power of regulation possessed by a municipality over streets within its limits. Moreover, a statute delegating executive functions to other agencies does not revoke the legislative control of a municipality over its streets.⁸⁶ So, also, where the power to make parts of city streets parts or links of a state road system is conferred on a state road commission, but to make them parts of such system the streets must be first designated by the commission, the corporation is not deprived of its jurisdiction until the commission has made such designation.⁸⁷

Where the state constitution expressly reserves to municipalities the power to control and regulate their streets, any attempt of the state legislature to take away such power is unconstitutional and void.⁸⁸ Similarly, where by charter the state has granted to a city the exclusive control of its streets, the legislature will not be permitted to dispute such control by a conflicting statute,⁸⁹ since the only method of taking away such power is by amending or repealing the statute granting and delineating such power.⁹⁰

Between particular boards or agencies. The determination of which of a number of boards or agencies has jurisdiction and control over the public streets depends on the terms of the municipal charter or other legislation.⁹¹ Where the control and regulation of streets, or of particular streets, have clearly been vested in another body, the city council lacks power to regulate them;⁹² but since the common council is the body naturally and ordinarily vested with such authority, that authority remains in it, unless it is clearly taken away and vested in some other person or body.⁹³ Where control is vested in a different body for a specified purpose, it will revert to the usual city authorities on completion of such purpose.⁹⁴ Under charter provisions, a space under a bridge may be subject to control of the bridge commissioner rather than the city comptroller;⁹⁵ but charter provisions giving to the administrator of improvements the power to construct and repair bridges do not prevent the city council, by ordinance, from giving to the administrator of commerce power to manage and control bridges after construction or repair, and an ordinance to that effect is valid.⁹⁶

Between county and municipality. As a general rule, under the various charter, statutory, or constitutional provisions, the city, rather than the county, has control of county roads lying within the city;⁹⁷ and the fact that a municipality's street was taken over as a county road does not deprive the municipality of its constitutional right of reasonable control of its streets.⁹⁸ However, in some jurisdictions control of county roads lying in a municipality remains in the county,⁹⁹ and under some statutes a county may acquire jurisdiction and the right to control streets within municipalities under certain conditions.¹ Where a village becomes incorporated, control of streets has been held to vest in it and it succeeds to the rights of the county;² and it is not necessary, as a prerequisite to the exercise of control over the streets, that after incorporation it should make a formal acceptance of the dedication previously made.³ Under statute the city and county authorities may have concurrent jurisdiction.⁴

While authorities have wide discretion as to regulations necessary in control of the streets, the regulations must be general and uniform, reasonable and certain, and in conformity with law.

In the exercise of the power to control and regulate the streets, the state or the municipal corporation has a wide discretion in determining what precautions or regulations are necessary or appropriate in the public interest under the circumstances.⁵ However, while it has been held that whatever reasonably tends to make the municipal control effective is a proper exercise of that power,⁶ it is the general rule that the power must be exercised by regulations which are general and uniform, reasonable and certain, and in conformity with law.⁷ Thus, the power may not be exercised arbitrarily, capriciously, or in bad faith,⁸ or so as to interfere with the personal liberty of citizens as guaranteed by the constitution and laws,⁹ or in violation of the personal or property rights of the people to the streets.¹⁰ Moreover, authorities must not impose unreasonable conditions which do not tend toward the protection of the interest held as trustee of the public easement in highways,¹¹ but the reasonableness of ordinances regulating the use of streets is presumed and primarily is to be determined by the municipal officers.¹² Accordingly, the courts will not interfere with the action of a municipality in its control of the streets except in a clear case of fraud, or arbitrary and unjust exercise of the power, or a manifest abuse of discretion.¹³

The power of a municipality to control and regulate the use of its streets is a continuing power to be exercised as often as and whenever the municipal authorities may think proper.¹⁴ Under statute

so providing, the power of control delegated to a municipality must be exercised by ordinance.¹⁵ Where the power of control is properly exercised, the regulations are binding on all the inhabitants of the municipality.¹⁶ Since the prescribing of reasonable regulations by a city for the use of its streets is a legislative function, notice of the proposed enactment of any such regulation to the parties to be affected thereby is not a matter of right.¹⁷ The fact that a private person makes a contribution or assumes obligations for the maintenance of the streets does not per se impair the validity of the official action of public boards concerning such ways.¹⁸

The right to use streets as highways, and regulation of such use, are considered infra §§ 1757-1774.

Except to the extent that power to do so is granted to a governmental body,¹⁹ the power to regulate does not include the power to prohibit a public use of the streets,²⁰ except temporarily, as where a street is closed pending construction work.²¹ However, it has been held, particularly where the power is granted by statute,²² that a municipality may, in a proper case, within the exercise of its police power, close a street to vehicular traffic, leaving the street open merely for pedestrian use.²³ The right to regulate implies the power to prohibit the disturbance of a public easement by one who has no lawful right to disturb the easement.²⁴

Private or special use. Where a city has power to grant the private use of its streets, as discussed infra § 1725, it may regulate such use,²⁵ in a reasonable²⁶ and uniform²⁷ manner; and the fact that a person has been granted a permit to use the streets does not exempt the permittee from the operation of subsequent ordinances and regulations legally enacted in the exercise of police powers.²⁸ Moreover, the power of a municipality to regulate the use of its streets for private or special purposes, as for private gain, is liberally construed;²⁹ and it has been held that municipal power to regulate includes the power to prohibit a private or special use.³⁰

§ 1691. Particular Regulations

The validity of a particular regulation may depend on whether the regulation relates to the use of a street for business for private gain, or to its use by a member of the public in the usual way.

In passing on the validity of particular regulations as to the use of streets, it is of prime importance to determine first whether the regulation is aimed at regulating a use of the street as a place or instrumentality for business for private gain, or a use of the street by a member of the public in the usual way for business or pleasure.³¹ While, as considered infra § 1761, municipal power to regulate the use of thoroughfares for ordinary and usual purposes should be sparingly exercised, when it comes to the use of streets as a definite means or instrumentality for a private use, such right may be given or withheld, as discussed supra § 1690.

Particular regulations as to the use of the streets by public utilities, trees, excavations, and various other matters are discussed infra §§ 1692-1695. Other particular regulations considered elsewhere in this title include regulations relating to the rights and remedies of abutting owners, infra §§ 1701-1715; regulations as to obstructions and encroachments, infra § 1747; regulations of the use of the street as a highway, infra §§ 1757-1774; and regulations of the use of the street for business purposes, infra § 1774.

§ 1692. — Use by Public Utilities

- a. In general
- b. Exercise of power to regulate

a. In General

Ordinarily, municipal corporations have the right, delegated to them by the state, to regulate the use of the streets by those engaged in public business, even as to public utilities granted an exclusive franchise.

The state has plenary power to regulate the use of streets by those engaged in public business.³² This power may be delegated to municipal corporations,³³ and has been said to exist solely by virtue of state delegation.³⁴ Under charter, constitutional, or statutory provisions, municipalities ordinarily have the right to control such use of their streets.³⁵ However, before it will be deemed that the legislature has transferred the power of supervision over public utilities to the municipal authorities under constitutional provisions so permitting, there must be clear and unmistakable statutory provisions conferring such power.³⁶ The municipal right is sometimes inferred from its police power.³⁷ Where the legislature grants enumerated specific powers to a municipality with respect to the adoption of regulations respecting public service corporations, it thereby impliedly withholds from the municipality all other powers in that respect.³⁸ Where roads subject to the jurisdiction of a county board are subsequently incorporated within the limits of a municipality, the municipality succeeds to the right of the county board to regulate the use of the streets by a public utility company.³⁹

The power to regulate the use of the streets by a public service company is a continuing power,⁴⁰ which is not exhausted by the regulations prescribed by the municipal authorities at the time of granting the consent to use the streets;⁴¹ nor can it be bargained away by the city.⁴²

Effect of grant of franchise. The state,⁴³ or a municipality acting under derived power,⁴⁴ does not lose the police power to regulate the use of streets by public utilities because of the grant of an exclusive franchise to the utility, since all such grants are made on the implied condition that they shall be subject to regulation for the public good.⁴⁵ In other words, rights in streets or highways granted to public service corporations are at all times held in subordination to the superior rights of the public,⁴⁶ and are subject not only to subsequent proper police regulations,⁴⁷ but also to prior general ordinances respecting use of the streets.⁴⁸ The grantee of a franchise from a municipality, where the laying of pipes in the street is necessary, takes the franchise subject to delay or refusal on the part of the common council in which is vested control of the streets to grant a permit to lay such pipes.⁴⁹ An agreement between a public utility and a municipality as to the removal of poles, permitted to be placed on the street, to a new position in the event of the widening of the street, is binding and enforceable.⁵⁰

Regulations of the use of streets by public utilities must be reasonable, and must not prohibit, annul, or destroy rights growing out of a valid contract. A reasonable fee or charge may be collected as compensation for the expense of regulation.

Regulations of the use of streets by public utilities must be reasonable,⁵¹ and must not prohibit, annul, or destroy rights growing out of a valid contract.⁵² The power to regulate does not authorize prohibition,⁵³ or include such regulation as constitutes unreasonable interference with the exercise of a franchise.⁵⁴ The measure of municipal power to regulate the use of streets by quasi-public corporations, chartered by the state to supply the public with water, light, conveyance, heat, information, and other conveniences, depends largely on the construction of charters and statutes, by which the state

In general, the courts will not interfere with an exercise of discretionary power over the use of municipal streets by public utilities in the absence of a clear abuse of discretion;⁵⁶ and a municipality may enact and enforce all reasonable regulations respecting such use of its streets.⁵⁷ However, under a statute so providing, the reasonableness of municipal regulations is subject to judicial review.⁵⁸ In general, ordinances regulating public utilities are presumed valid until the contrary is shown;⁵⁹ and the burden of showing the unreasonableness of such an ordinance is on the public utility.⁶⁰

The validity of conditions imposed on the grant of the right to use the streets is considered infra § 1721.

Regulations held valid. Implied power

The power to compel public service corporations to relocate at their own expense facilities maintained in pub-

decisions on the question, removal⁶⁸ of the utility's facilities; requiring the placing of electric wires in underground conduits;⁶⁹ requiring the removing of street wires to a less dangerous location,⁷⁰ or temporarily removing wires to permit the moving of buildings;⁷¹ restricting limits within which poles may be erected in a street;⁷² or prohibiting their erection without obtaining authority from the council.⁷³

Regulations held invalid. Particular regulations which have been held unreasonable and invalid include regulations prohibiting the digging up of the surface of any street except by permission of the council,⁷⁴ or prohibiting a gas company from laying its pipes along the city streets,⁷⁵ or from opening a paved street to lay pipes from the main to the opposite side of the street,⁷⁶ or limiting the time within which such work shall be done.⁷⁷

Charge for regulation. A municipality may collect a reasonable fee or charge as compensation for the expense of regulation,⁷⁸ which may be in an amount ultimately proving in excess of the actual expense involved;⁷⁹ and the burden of proof rests on the person asserting the unreasonableness of such a charge or fee.⁸⁰ In determining whether such a fee is reasonable, the courts will consider all facts relevant and material to the particular matter involved.⁸¹ It has been held that a municipality has no authority to compel public service corporations to pay the expense of public regulations, unless such power has been conferred by statute.⁸²

Where a municipality orders one public utility company operating in the street to relocate and use its property in a position and manner which must inevitably completely destroy the property of another public utility company with equal rights in the street, it has been held that the municipality must reimburse the latter company for the cost of removing its property to another location.⁸³

Waiver. A municipal board has no power to waive an ordinance requirement affecting use of the streets by a franchise holding corporation so as to create an estoppel.⁸⁴

A municipal corporation ordinarily has control of trees in its streets; and it may, in the exercise of sound discretion, remove trees for a proper purpose, providing it complies with statutory requirements.

Ordinarily, a municipal corporation has control of trees in its streets,⁸⁵ and may act as to them under its police power.⁸⁶ Accordingly, a municipality may forbid any act injurious thereto without municipal consent,⁸⁷ or perform proper municipal functions lic streets where public health, safety, or convenience requires such relocation is to be implied unless expressly negated—New York City Tunnel Authority v. Consolidated Edison Co. of N. Y., supra.

Authority to prosecute for injury
Ga.—City of Albany v. Lippitt, 13 S. E.2d 807, 191 Ga. 756.

Penal ordinance held valid

An ordinance providing for the care and protection of shade trees in the public highways, streets, and avenues that imposes, in addition to a fine, a penalty of imprisonment for its violation is valid.—Commonwealth v. Roth, 54 Pa.Dist. & Co. 308, 21 Lehigh.L.J. 229.

What constitutes "shade tree"
Maple tree, so decayed as to be

despite incidental injury to trees.⁸⁸ The power of a municipality over such trees includes the right to remove or trim them where it is reasonably necessary for public safety or convenience,⁸⁹ or for the improvement of the street,⁹⁰ or its beautification,⁹¹ or for preservation of city sewers;⁹² and this power exists, even though the fee of the street is not in the municipality.⁹³ Municipal control over trees is not divested by permission given a street car company to operate its cars through the streets.⁹⁴

While every reasonable intendment will be implied to support the discretionary action of a municipality or its officials with respect to the removal of trees,⁹⁵ and the courts will not interfere unless there is an abuse of discretion,⁹⁶ such municipal power must not be exercised willfully, wantonly, or unnecessarily,⁹⁷ so as to remove as obstructions or nuisances trees which do not in fact obstruct;⁹⁸ and, it has been held, the power should be so exercised as to avoid, if possible, an entire loss of property.⁹⁹ An ordinance unreasonably directing removal of trees is void;¹ and, a fortiori, trees may not be removed or trimmed where such action is for purposes not covered by statutory authority.² An authority from a council to trim trees does not confer the right to destroy and remove them;³ nor does authority to care for and superintend trees confer such right.⁴ An ordinance requiring the permission of the chairman of the street committee to cut or trim shade trees in a city, and directing him to state in the permit how the work is to be done and that it be done under the supervision of the street overseer, is as to such directions merely directory, and a person who has obtained the permission of the chairman of the street committee cannot be con-dangerous to public, was not a "shade tree," within an ordinance prohibiting destruction of shade trees in streets.—Village of Cattaraugus v. Johnson, 249 N.Y.S. 327, 139 Misc. 368, affirmed 250 N.Y.S. 945, 233 App.Div. 799.

victed of a violation of the ordinance, although that official omits to make such directions.⁵

As to rights and duties of abutting owners. Municipal control over trees is not divested by a license to abutters to set out and care for shade trees,⁶ since the rights of abutters are subject to the paramount power of the municipality.⁷ Damages cannot ordinarily be recovered by an abutter for removal of trees which constitute an obstruction to public use of the street;⁸ but, where the action of the municipality in destroying a tree is held to be arbitrary, the municipality may be liable in damages to the abutting owner on the filing of a proper claim.⁹ The owner of land on the side of the road opposite to the land on which injured trees were growing and who had no interest or title in such land is not an abutting owner within a statute making it an offense to injure trees within the highway limits without the consent of the abutting owner.¹⁰

Abutters are not bound to care for the trees planted on the sidewalk by the municipality, in the absence of any statute or municipal regulation imposing that duty on them;¹¹ and power to regulate the planting and protection of shade trees does not include the power to compel an abutter to cut them down.¹²

Even where passively permitted to do so by the municipality, an adjoining owner cannot maintain trees in that portion of the street designed for vehicles so as to block his neighbor's means of ingress and egress.¹³

Who may remove trees; tree wardens. Under a statute so providing, the removal of public shade trees may be made only by the tree warden,¹⁴ or, where there is no tree warden, by such other officer as may be charged with the duties of tree warden.¹⁵ Where, by statute, the power to preserve and care for certain boulevards or ways is placed in a state commission, rather than in the towns or cities, only such commission has the power to remove the trees on such way or boulevard;¹⁶ and a statute placing control of public shade trees in city or town officers does not apply.¹⁷ The tree warden of a town, in performing his official duties, acts as a public officer;¹⁸ and his powers are limited by statute.¹⁹

A private person may not remove or trim trees interfering with public travel without authority from the municipality.²⁰ The city may not transfer to a third person its power of removing or trimming privately owned trees to the detriment of such owner.²¹

Right of municipalities to injunction

In suits by cities to enjoin metropolitan district commission from removing trees on a boulevard within respective cities, allegation that work was being conducted in such manner as to make cities liable to travelers did not entitle cities to relief sought, since under statute the commonwealth, not the city or town, is liable for injuries to travelers through defects in boulevard; moreover, even if trees were property of cities, a naked allegation of arbitrary and irrational conduct and bad faith on part of commission in removing trees was insufficient to entitle cities to relief sought without allegations of facts showing that commission did not have right to remove trees.—City of Medford v. Metropolitan District Commission, supra.

municipal corporation or its officer, in order to remove a tree from a street, must proceed in a lawful manner,²² the qualified ownership existing in an abutting owner as to the tree does not constitute private property in the sense that the municipality must by legal proceeding condemn the right.²³ While in some jurisdictions notice and a public hearing are not necessarily prerequisite to the removal of a tree,²⁴ it has been held that an owner is entitled to a reasonable notice where the municipality has decided to require such removal.²⁵ Under a statute so providing, trees may not be removed by tree wardens or similar officers without first holding a public hearing;²⁶ and if, on the hearing, written objection has been made to the removal of trees, they may not be removed without approval by the selectman or mayor.²⁷ Where, however, the statute so provides a tree may be removed without notice or hearing,²⁸ or the approval of the mayor,²⁹ where it is ordered done by the officials designated in the statute, whose power and duty it is to order such trimming or removal where a tree within the limits of the highway is dangerous or an obstruction to travel,³⁰ or where the removal of a tree is necessary for the purpose of widening the highway.³¹ In fact it has been held to be of importance that there be a compliance with the statute requiring a hearing,³² and the failure of the tree warden to comply with the statute cannot be justified simply by the fact of his office and that he acted in good faith.³³

31. Mass.—Graham v. Board of Public Works of Pittsfield, 189 N.E. 820, 285 Mass. 544.

What constitutes "widening highway"

"Widening the highway," as used in statute dispensing with public hearing and mayor's approval of order for removal of trees for "widening the highway," signifies change in location of highway or extension of its boundaries by bringing more of the earth's surface within that location by means of exercise of eminent domain, term "widening" being often comprehended in the broader term, "alteration;" and statute was held inapplicable to mere widening of traveled portion of highway, so that, where purpose of board of public works for order that trees not endangering travelers be removed was mere extension of traveled portion of highway, order not approved by the mayor never became effective.—Graham v. Board of Public Works of Pittsfield, supra.

Trial judge's report, made at request of board of public works, that chairman of board testified that object of order that trees be removed from highway was extension of traveled portion of highway must be accepted where record of board stated no reason for order and judge found that trees did not obstruct, endanger, or incommode travelers.—Graham v. Board of Public Works of Pittsfield, supra.

Reasons for rule

"In the first place, if the warden approached the subject with an open mind, as it must be assumed that he would, his conclusion, after hearing the pros and cons, if the question was controverted, might be entirely different than if arrived at without such hearing. Then, too, his decision is no longer final, but may be reviewed by the selectmen or trustees upon the request in writing of a party in interest."—Skinner v. Buchanan, supra.

to a municipality to control the time and manner of making excavations in the street to accomplish what the legislature has authorized to be done does not empower the municipality to refuse its assent.³⁸

Permit required; fee therefor. An ordinance is not unreasonable or invalid which prohibits any person from making excavations in a street without the consent of, or a permit from, the municipal authorities,³⁹ provided it imposes no unreasonable conditions as to the manner in which the excavations shall be made and the street repaired.⁴⁰ A municipality may make the excavation of the street conditional on the payment of particular fees or charges,⁴¹ provided they are uniform⁴² and reasonable.⁴³

§ 1695. — Other Matters

The courts have adjudicated the validity of various regulations relating to municipal streets and the use thereof, such as regulations as to sales, the distribution of circulars, soliciting alms, and the placing of signs and billboards thereon.

Various regulations relating to municipal streets and the use thereof have been held to be valid,⁴⁴ such as regulations relating to the numbering of houses and lots in the streets, and the renumbering thereof in accordance with the conditions contained in a charter provision granting the municipality the power to regulate such matter.⁴⁵

Sales on streets. The right of a municipality to regulate sales of goods, pamphlets, or other articles on the streets carries with it not only the right to impose reasonable restrictions and regulations on such sales,⁴⁶ but even the right to suppress or prohibit sales on the streets.⁴⁷ An ordinance prohibiting sales, or the selling of goods, pamphlets, or other articles, in certain specified congested areas,⁴⁸ or during certain specified hours in certain areas,⁴⁹

has been held to be a valid and reasonable regulation, even as applied to the sale of religious literature by members of a religious organization.⁵⁰

The consistency of regulations as to the use of public places with the guaranty of freedom of the press is discussed in Constitutional Law § 213 c (2).

Distribution of circulars. While legislation prohibiting the distribution of booklets, handbills, and similar matter in public places, or requiring written permission therefor, has been held to be invalid, as discussed in Constitutional Law § 213 c (2), it has also been held to be within the powers of municipal corporations to regulate or prohibit the throwing, casting, or distributing in or on any of the streets, of handbills, circulars, cards, or other advertising matter,⁵¹ so as to prevent the littering of the streets,⁵² to diminish the danger from fire and the accumulation of filth,⁵³ and to protect from molestation those on the streets who do not desire to be detained;⁵⁴ but such regulations must be reasonable.⁵⁵

It has also been held that a municipality can enact reasonable regulations relating to the time, manner, and place of distribution, which do not unreasonably interfere with the distribution of literature expressing opinions and views.⁵⁶ Thus, it has been held that a municipality may properly enact an ordinance limiting the use of the streets for the distribution of circulars to reasonable hours of the day or week,⁵⁷ or an ordinance requiring distributors to obtain a permit⁵⁸ which may prescribe the time and condition under which the street may be so used,⁵⁹ provided such permit is not subject to arbitrary will but is granted on reasonable showing and applies to all alike.⁶⁰ It has been held that such ordinances may regulate the distribution of circulars, even though such distribution is for religious, patriotic, charitable, civic, or political purposes.⁶¹

A municipality may properly prohibit the distribution of obscene, lewd, or indecent literature.⁶²

Rules governing the construction of statutes and ordinances generally have been applied in the construction of ordinances and regulations as to the distribution of circulars.⁶³ An ordinance prohibit-

Ordinance held reasonable

An ordinance which prohibited distribution of handbills was held a reasonable exercise of city's power to maintain "internal police" within statute, and was held not to be unconstitutional or unreasonable because of an amendment thereto which created an exception for distribution of notices of a meeting of an organization of citizens which is recognized, if contents of notice are approved by mayor.—Commonwealth v. Kimball, 13 N.E.2d 18, 299 Mass. 353, 114 A.L.R. 1440.

Approval of mayor

Under a city ordinance prohibiting distribution of handbills except where distribution is of notice of meeting of organization of citizens which is recognized, and contents of notice are approved by mayor, the sufficient reason for requiring approval is to make sure that scope of exceptions is not exceeded, the approving officer being under duty to approve or disapprove according to his honest judgment, and not arbitrarily.—Commonwealth v. Kimball, 13 N.E.2d 18, 299 Mass. 353, 114 A.L.R. 1440.

Specific words as controlling

In ordinance prohibiting distributing of circulars, handbills, cards, posters, dodgers, "or other printed or advertising matter," quoted phrase is limited by preceding words.—City of Milwaukee v. Kassen, supra.

Notices of meeting of "recognized" organizations

In city ordinance prohibiting distribution of handbills except where distribution is of notices of a meeting of an organization of citizens which is recognized, and the contents of notice are approved by mayor, "recognized" means no more than

ing the distribution of advertising matter on the streets of the municipality does not apply to, and is not violated by, a distribution of matter which is not advertising and which is not distributed for advertising purposes.⁶⁴ Similarly, a regulation prohibiting the distribution of handbills and similar matter, and providing that it is not intended to prevent the distribution of anything other than commercial and business advertising, applies only to matter primarily designed to bring about mercantile transactions.⁶⁵ An ordinance prohibiting the distribution of handbills has been held to apply to a general circulation of such matter, and not to isolated acts.⁶⁶

Soliciting alms. It is within the power of a municipality to enact an ordinance prohibiting the business of soliciting alms on its streets without a permit,⁶⁷ provided such ordinance is reasonable.⁶⁸

Signs and billboards. A municipality has the power to regulate or prohibit the erection or placing of signs and billboards along its streets,⁶⁹ and may compel the removal of such existing structures;⁷⁰ and the fact that a state agency has made some regulations relating to signs and billboards will not affect the validity of municipal regulations which are not repugnant thereto.⁷¹

9. CARE OF STREETS

§ 1696. In General

A municipal corporation must keep its streets in repair, free from obstructions and nuisances, and in a reasonably safe condition for public travel.

It is in general the duty of a municipal corporation to keep its streets which are open for public use in repair, free from obstructions and nuisances and in a reasonably safe condition for public travel;⁷² and this rule applies with regard to state or other general highways as far as within the corpo-

"actual" and "publicly known" as contrasted with "proposed," "intended," or "secret."—Commonwealth v. Kimball, 13 N.E.2d 18, 299 Mass. 353, 114 A.L.R. 1440.

An ordinance in effect prohibiting any and all types of vertical signs and any other signs projecting from the face of any building, over any sidewalk, street, highway, or alley in village may be sustained on aesthetic considerations alone.—Preferred Tires v. Village of Hempstead, supra.

Ordinance held valid

A city ordinance prohibiting angle signs over sidewalk, street, or highway and prohibiting signs which are flat against building or structure from extending in excess of twelve inches over sidewalk, street, or highway is not invalid on ground of lack of clarity and failure to promote enumerated subjects; nor is such ordinance, prohibiting certain types of signs over sidewalks, but permitting erection and maintenance of signs on a marquee on theaters, hotels, or public buildings arbitrary, capricious, vague, and indefinite because of failure to specify type, size, and other features of signs permitted.—*Mallory, Inc. v. rate limits and within the control of the municipal authorities,⁷³ although the duty may be placed on county authorities by statute and the municipality relieved from responsibility.⁷⁴ It is not, however, the duty of the municipality to keep streets and alleys open, in repair, and free from nuisance until it opens them to public travel or in some other manner invites the public to use them for street and alley purposes,⁷⁵ and the duty does not apply to thoroughfares unless they have been accepted as a public way by the municipal authorities;⁷⁶ and authority to vacate and close streets empowers the municipality to relieve the public from the charge of maintaining a street no longer used or useful as a street.⁷⁷ Streets must be made and kept suitable for their primary use as public highways,⁷⁸ to the end that the public may enjoy its rights,⁷⁹ even though such streets are subject to a superior servitude.⁸⁰

During the reorganization of a municipal corporation it is not released from its duty to exercise the power with which it is invested to keep its streets and sidewalks in a safe condition.⁸¹

§ 1697. Street Work by Inhabitants

Under power expressly granted, a municipal corporation may require the performance of road work on its streets by its inhabitants, or the payment of money in lieu thereof. An ordinance containing such requirement does not impose a tax.

The legislature may authorize the municipal corporation to compel road work by its inhabitants, or the payment of money in lieu thereof,⁸² and to provide for the imposition of a fine or imprisonment in case of default on the part of able-bodied male inhabitants.⁸³ Such powers are not within the incidental powers of a municipal corporation, however,⁸⁴ but must be expressly conferred;⁸⁵ and the mere fact that no law prohibits or prevents the corporation from requiring such labor is not sufficient.⁸⁶ Moreover, the general power of a municipal corporation to control the streets and highways does not include the power to compel citizens to work thereon;⁸⁷ and, where the express provisions of a statute authorizing cities of a stated class to require its residents to perform labor on the streets are repealed, general grants of power will not read-

Taxation distinguished. An ordinance requiring street labor or the payment of money in lieu thereof does not impose a tax;⁸⁹ and it has been held that an ordinance requiring street work or the payment of a tax is not a revenue measure.⁹⁰

Road labor laws generally. Requirements by a municipal corporation, under its delegated power, of work on its streets are distinct from requirements of road labor imposed by general laws.⁹¹

Exemptions. The propriety of requiring persons who are not able-bodied to perform street labor or pay money in lieu thereof in common with other citizens is a question of policy to be settled by the legislative department.⁹² Where statutes or ordinances exempt certain persons because of age, bodily infirmity, or other reasons from the duty to perform such labor, one who claims an exemption must prove his immunity.⁹³ A statute creating an exemption for liability for work on the public roads has been held not to create such an exemption as against a requirement of a municipal corporation of work on the streets.⁹⁴ Under a statute providing that no person shall be liable to do road work more than a prescribed number of days in any one year, one who has paid a street tax as a substitute for road duty in one city is not liable to road duty in another city in the same year.⁹⁵

Enforcement. On the ground that an ordinance requiring street work or the payment of a tax in lieu thereof is not a revenue measure, it has been held that such an ordinance can be enforced by criminal prosecution.⁹⁶ In such a prosecution, it is no defense that the authorities failed to enforce the ordinance uniformly.⁹⁷

§ 1698. Cleaning Streets

A municipal corporation may provide for the cleaning of its streets; but there must be a compliance with statutory or charter requirements as to the manner in which contracts therefor shall be made.

It has been said that no purpose is more properly connected with the government of a municipal corporation than that which is necessary to be done in cleaning and keeping in order its streets;⁹⁸ but it has also been held that the cleaning of streets calls into exercise private or proprietary functions, rather than governmental functions.⁹⁹ The question whether the cleaning of streets constitutes a governmental or public function, or a corporate or private function, as affecting the liability of a municipality in tort for the acts of its officers or employees, is discussed supra § 777.

There must be a compliance with statutory or charter requirements as to the manner in which contracts for street cleaning shall be made,¹ but the municipality is liable for the labor done by employees of its street inspector.² Under a contract for street cleaning, providing that the work shall be performed under the supervision and direction, and be subject to the approval, of a municipal official, such officer has authority to prohibit the doing of work

by the contractor not within the contract.³

Arbitration. Where a contract for street cleaning shows on its face that it was clearly intended to be an arbitration agreement, and an award of the director of public works, as arbitrator, is set up in defense to a suit on the contract, a provision at the conclusion of the contract that no certificate of any city officer should bind the city will not be considered, being repugnant to the paramount intention of parties as to arbitration.⁴ Where a city street-cleaning contract contains an arbitration provision apparently so comprehensive as to include all disputes to be determined by the engineer, and another arbitration provision limited to certain defined questions for determination by a director, they may both stand, and matters specified in the second provision will be excepted from the more comprehensive first provision.⁵ The function of such an arbitrator is judicial where the contract does not provide for ex parte hearings by him and it is his duty to afford the contractor an opportunity to be heard if he so wishes.⁶

Duty of abutting owners. Under a general power to provide for the cleaning of streets and other public places, a municipal corporation cannot require abutting owners to clean the streets in front of their property.⁷

§ 1699. Street Sprinkling

A municipal corporation may provide for the sprinkling of its streets.

The question whether the sprinkling of streets by a municipal corporation constitutes a corporate function or a public function depends on the surrounding circumstances and the purpose of the sprinkling.⁸ A statute conferring on town councilmen the exclusive control over the streets, and power to appoint all officers and agents of the town, confers authority to provide for the sprinkling of the streets and to appoint a person to perform the service under the control of the council;⁹ and the person appointed may be removed at any time unless the council, in appointing him, may contract with him and bind the town to retain him for a specified term.¹⁰ Even without express authority the city may provide by ordinance, under its general power to regulate the streets, that those who desire to sprinkle streets as a business shall first obtain licenses.¹¹ An ordinance requiring streetcar companies to sprinkle streets so that no dust will be raised by a passing car is invalid where it requires sprinkling in all seasons and fixes an oppressive penalty for failure so to do.¹²

§ 1700. Removal of Ice, Snow, and Other Substances

Generally, municipal regulations may require abutters under penalty to remove ice and snow from their sidewalks, and the duty may be imposed on tenants as well as on owners.

While there is a conflict among authorities as to whether municipal regulations requiring abutters under penalty to remove ice and snow from their sidewalks are valid,¹³ and they have been held invalid in some jurisdictions,¹⁴ the weight of authority sustains them as a proper exercise of the police powers,¹⁵ subject to a general requirement of reasonableness.¹⁶ A requirement that the snow or ice be removed within a specified time has been held valid where such requirement is not shown to be unreasonable;¹⁷ and such provisions, where proper, may be confined to sidewalks of a certain class, although but a small part of the sidewalks in the municipality.¹⁸

The duty may be imposed on persons owning, or in the control of, the abutting property,¹⁹ and on tenants as well as on owners.²⁰ However, under an ordinance providing that the occupier, or the owner of premises if unoccupied, shall be liable for a penalty for failure to remove snow, it becomes the duty of owners so to do only when the property is unoccupied;²¹ and in general, in order to impose liability, the place²² and the person²³ must be within the purview of the regulation.

An abutting owner's failure to remove caved-in earth on a sidewalk in front of his property on written notice from the city is not a violation of an ordinance requiring abutting owners to remove all "weeds, earth, snow, ice, or other obstructions or substances" from sidewalks, such ordinance applying merely to snow and ice and ordinary accumulations of dirt.²⁴

Removal from street railroad tracks. Where the statute authorizes a municipality to establish such rules and regulations as to the removal of snow and ice from the tracks of street railways as in its judgment the convenience of the public may require, the municipality may prohibit the removal of snow and ice from any part or the whole of the road, although such prohibition compels the temporary disuse of the tracks.²⁵

10. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF ABUTTING OWNERS

a. In General

§ 1701. In General

An abutting owner has two kinds of rights in the street, the public one which he enjoys in common with all citizens, and certain private rights which arise from his ownership of property contiguous to the street; these private rights constitute property of which an abutter cannot be unlawfully deprived, although they are subordinate to the public use of the street for proper purposes and subject to state or municipal regulation.

An abutting owner²⁶ has two distinct kinds of rights in the street, the public one which he enjoys in common with all citizens,²⁷ and certain private rights which arise from his ownership of property contiguous to the street, and which are not common to the public generally;²⁸ and this is true even though the fee of the street is in the municipal cor-

Under an ordinance requiring users or occupants of buildings abutting on sidewalks to remove snow and ice, retention by owners of control of sidewalk for common use and benefit of tenants in their building is not sufficient use and occupancy of the building by the owners to impose on them the duty of snow removal, and the duty rests on one who is tenant and occupant of a first story store-room.—Rich v. poration.²⁹ While it has been broadly stated that an abutting owner's rights in the street are the same as any other member of the traveling public except for the right of access,³⁰ it has been held that these private rights include the rights of light, air, view, and privacy, as discussed infra § 1702, as well as the right of access, infra § 1703, and anything adding to the value of the street to the abutter.³¹ Thus, it has been recognized that an abutting owner has a right to have the street kept open and continued as a public street for the benefit of his property,³²

and the right to the enjoyment and use of whatever is permitted or maintained by the public authorities as part of the street.³³

The private rights under consideration,³⁴ or at least certain of them,³⁵ constitute property or property rights of which an abutter cannot be unlawfully deprived. They have been termed "easements,"³⁶ and, although they may not be true easements in the strictest sense, they are at least rights in the nature of appurtenant easements, and are governed by the law of easements.³⁷ They are appurtenant to the possession and use of the abutting property,³⁸ and they follow and inhere in the property when leased.³⁹ An abutter's particular proprietary rights begin with those of the public when the street is opened to use.⁴⁰

Regulation and restriction of rights. The rights of an abutting owner or occupant are not absolute,⁴¹ even as against persons using the streets for purposes other than travel,⁴² but are subordinate to the public use of the street for travel and for proper municipal purposes,⁴³ and subject to the power of the state and the municipality to control and regulate the streets;⁴⁴ and this is true even though the fee of the street is in the abutting property owner.⁴⁵ An abutting owner has no right to be protected from the hazards of traffic⁴⁶ and has no vested right in the volume of traffic passing his property.⁴⁷

Preventing flow of surface water onto land. The right of the owner of land abutting on a street to fill in his land or erect a barrier on his land so as to prevent the flow of surface water from the street over such land has been recognized.⁴⁸

Park road. It has been held that a roadway constructed and maintained by a municipality as part of its park system does not become a public way in which abutters have special rights apart from agreement.⁴⁹

§ 1702. Light, Air, View, and Privacy

The owner of property abutting on a public street has an easement over the street of light, air, and view, and an interference with his right of privacy has been considered as an element going to make up his right to relief against an encroachment on the highway.

The owner of property abutting on a public street has an easement over the street of light and air,⁵⁰

and view⁵¹ or prospect,⁵² constituting a property right possessing value.⁵³ However, the right of view does not entitle an abutting owner to demand that the street shall remain in a natural and unimproved condition.⁵⁴

View from street. In a number of decisions the right of an abutting owner to an unobstructed view of his premises from the street,⁵⁵ as, for example, for the purpose of the display of goods⁵⁶ or of advertising signs,⁵⁷ has been recognized. Although there is authority to the contrary,⁵⁸ it has been held that the right is not restricted to the display of goods or of advertising matter related to the business conducted on the premises⁵⁹ and that one who leases the whole or a part of the land for the purpose of erecting an advertising sign on it acquires the same right as the owner had.⁶⁰

ment going to make up his right to relief against an encroachment on the highway,⁶¹ as where he seeks to enjoin the construction of a bridge across the street connecting parcels of defendant's property located on opposite sides thereof.⁶²

§ 1703. Access

- a. In general
- b. Entrances and driveways
- c. Connection with water mains, sewers, and other pipes

a. In General

An abutting owner has the right to ingress to, and egress from, his property over and by means of the adjacent portion of the street, and, while this right is subservient to the primary rights of the public to the use of the street and is subject to reasonable regulations, it constitutes a property right which may not be taken away or substantially impaired without just compensation.

The right of an abutting property owner to access to his property is subservient to the primary rights of the public to the free use of the street for the purpose of travel and incidental purposes,⁷⁰ and is subject to reasonable regulations in the public interest and for the promotion of public convenience and safety,⁷¹ even to the extent, it has been held, of denying vehicular access to the property of an abutting owner.⁷² While the right of access may be exercised, even at the risk of temporary inconvenience to persons traveling on the highways,⁷³ it may not be exercised in such manner as to render the street dangerous for travel.⁷⁴ The extent of the right or easement of access may be said to be that which is reasonably required giving consideration to all the purposes to which the property is adapted,⁷⁵ and the right includes, as incidental thereto, the right to perform acts reasonably necessary to the effective exercise thereof.⁷⁶ The right is more extensive than the mere opportunity to go on the street immediately in front of the property.⁷⁷ Although there is authority to the contrary,⁷⁸ it has been held that the right extends in both directions

as far, at least, as the next intersecting street,⁷⁹ but it has been held that any inconveniences which may be suffered or hazards encountered beyond the intersecting street do not affect his rights.⁸⁰

Roads part of park system. Abutting owners have been held to have no right of access to parkways or boulevards constructed and maintained by a municipality as part of its park system in the absence of an agreement conferring such right.⁸¹

Improvement, repair, or maintenance of street. While it has been declared that the abutting owner may expect the municipality to protect and preserve his right of access by changing the contour of the street where necessary and practicable,⁸² it has been held that the right of access does not require the municipality to construct approaches from the house or lot of the abutter on the traveled part of the street⁸³ or to grade the street up to the lines of the abutting property.⁸⁴ The municipality may deprive the abutting owner of access for the period necessary to improve, repair, or maintain the street.⁸⁵

Change of grade. Where a municipality has changed the grade of a street, it cannot preclude an abutting owner from making such reasonable improvements or from employing and using such reasonable means as may be necessary to enable him to exercise and enjoy the right of ingress and egress between the street and his property.⁸⁶ A change of grade may amount to an unreasonable interference with the right of access of an abutting owner, and as such may be invalid;⁸⁷ but, where the grade of a sidewalk has been duly established by the proper authorities, abutters cannot compel a change in its grade to suit their convenience.⁸⁸

Construction of street. A lot owner cannot complain of the construction of a street on an adjoining lot on the ground that his right of access is damaged, since he had no right of access before the street was constructed.⁸⁹

Invitees. The right of access includes not only the abutter's own right to unobstructed passage in and out of his premises, but the right of unobstructed accessibility to guests and patrons who come and go, and who need, without inconveniencing others, to stop briefly in the street in front of his premises.⁹⁰

trance or driveway for vehicular access to his premises from the street, but this right is subject to reasonable regulation, and there are circumstances under which the right has been denied.

Generally speaking, an abutting owner has a right⁹² or privilege⁹³ to construct and maintain over a public sidewalk an entrance or driveway for vehicular access to his premises from the street. However, this right or privilege is not an unlimited one which may be exercised without appropriate safeguards for the public,⁹⁴ but is subject to reasonable regulation,⁹⁵ and there are circumstances under which it has been denied.⁹⁶ Authority given municipalities to prevent the passage of vehicles over and across sidewalks has been held to authorize the prohibition of construction and maintenance of private driveways across sidewalks.⁹⁷ On the other hand, it has been held that an ordinance prohibiting driving over a sidewalk does not prohibit the use of private driveways crossing the sidewalk, as the word "sidewalk" in its ordinary acceptance does not include driveways.⁹⁸ A municipality, by granting a permit to construct a driveway over a sidewalk, does not surrender its regulatory power over the streets,⁹⁹ and in a proper case may revoke

Ordinance requiring permit

(1) An ordinance requiring consent of council for changing sidewalk grade for driveway has been held not void as uncertain, unreasonable, discriminatory, and tending toward monopoly.—Wilmot v. City of Chicago, 160 N.E. 206, 328 Ill. 552, 62 A.L.R. 394.

(2) On the other hand, an ordinance forbidding construction of driveway across sidewalk without permit from city official, who must be satisfied that driveway will not unduly obstruct public travel or be dangerous to the public, and not providing for review of refusal of permit, has been held unconstitutional as vesting in administrative officer unlimited and unguided discretion.—R G Lydy, Inc., v. City of Chicago, 190 N.E. 273, 356 Ill. 230.

Ordinance not a zoning ordinance

A municipal ordinance prohibiting opening of a driveway across a sidewalk within specified distance from nearest property line of intersection of any two avenues was not a zoning ordinance, but merely a traffic ordinance, and defendants' maintenance of driveways across sidewalks, within the forbidden distance furnished no ground for having business declared a nuisance.—State ex rel. Szodomka v. Gruber, 10 So.2d 899, 201 La. 1068.

332 Pa. 474—Farmers-Kissinger Market House Co. Inc., v. Reading, 165 A. 398, 310 Pa. 493.

Access at particular location

(1) There is no privilege of access at any particular location.

Mass.—Metropolitan Dist. Commission v. Cataldo, 153 N.E. 328, 257 Mass. 38.

Mo.—Fowler v. Nelson, 246 S.W. 638, 213 Mo.App. 82.

(2) Easement of access does not include right to cross sidewalk to and from part of public way used for vehicular traffic at all places along sidewalk, and does not necessarily include right to cross sidewalk at outer edge in front of entrance to building.—Centebear v. Selectmen of Watertown, 167 N.E. 303, 268 Mass. 121.

Fact that driveway at particular point is essential to profitable transaction of any particular business on the property is a factor which the owner has a right to have weighed, but it is not determinative of his right, and the right to construct, maintain, and use a driveway at such point may be denied where such use would be fraught with such unusual hazard that the danger to the traveling public would be out of proportion to the detriment to the owner in being deprived of it.—Tilton v. Sharpe, 155 A. 44, 85 N.H. 138.

A city is not required to permit owners of lots abutting on land, purchased by city and dedicated thereby for boulevard purposes, to construct a way across strip of land intervening between such lots and boulevard pavement.—State ex rel. Copland v. City of Toledo, 62 N.E. 2d 256, 75 Ohio App. 378.

the permit.¹ However, a municipal officer, unless expressly authorized by the statutes or ordinances, cannot require the removal of a driveway for which municipal permission has been given.²

Separate lots belonging to one owner. One using separate lots as one tract is not entitled as a matter of law to a separate driveway for each lot.³

Roads forming part of park system. Although, as discussed supra subsection a of this section, abutting owners have no right of access to parkways or boulevards constructed and maintained by a municipality as part of its park system in the absence of an agreement conferring such right, where such right is given by agreement, in the absence of a provision in the agreement to the contrary, the location, number, and width of the driveways which the abutting owner will be permitted to construct and maintain depend on the facts and circumstances and involve the exercise of judgment and discretion on the part of the municipal authorities,⁴ and their decision will not be disturbed unless it appears that they acted in bad faith, or that it was a mere arbitrary or irrational exercise of power having no substantial relation to the public safety or welfare.⁵

Permit to cut curb for driveway. The municipality may under its power to regulate driveways properly require an abutting owner to obtain a permit to cut the street curb for a driveway.⁶ The power to grant or refuse such permit may be exercised only by the officer in whom, or the body in which, it resides,⁷ and the extent of the power conferred⁸ and the manner of exercising it⁹ depend largely on the terms of the grant. While the municipal authorities may not arbitrarily refuse a permit,¹⁰ it has been held that the denial of a permit does not violate constitutional guaranties,¹¹ and that the refusal of the city council to grant a permit is a legitimate and proper exercise of the police power where such refusal has a substantial relation to the public safety.¹² Under a grant of power reasonably to regulate curb cuts, the municipal authorities may exercise a reasonable discretion as to the location and width of a driveway.¹³ Power given to issue curb-cut permits should be exercised in a manner that will expedite the public business and with the view to adjusting fairly private and public rights which conflict,¹⁴ and a property owner should not be put to the inconvenience and annoyance of filing repeated applications for a curb cut until a plat in connection therewith finally meets the unexpressed views of the municipal authorities as to what is a reasonable curb cut both as to location and width.¹⁵ In the absence of any other adequate remedy, the abutting owner is entitled to review by certiorari the action of the municipal authorities in refusing a permit.¹⁶ On such review the court is without pow-

1. Where no expenditures of any consequence had been made on the faith of the permit, and revocation would not deprive the holder of the permit of reasonable ingress and egress, the city could lawfully revoke a permit given to construct a driveway at a point not directly in front of the permit holder's land.—Denman v. City of Tacoma, supra.

Permit reserving right to revoke

Where permission to construct a driveway across a sidewalk has been issued without sufficient consideration of the vehicular and pedestrian traffic at or near it and contains a reservation of the right to revoke it at any time, it may be revoked where its continued use will be dangerous to the safety of the traveling public.—Wood v. Richmond, 138 S.E. 560, 148 Va. 400.

c. Connection with Water Mains, Sewers, and Other Pipes

The right of access of the abutter has been held to include the right to use the street in connecting with service pipes in the street.

The right of access of the abutter has been held to include the right to use the street in connecting with water, gas, sewer, and similar pipes in the streets.¹⁸ While this right may be regulated and controlled,¹⁹ it may not be denied to an abutting owner as long as it is exercised in accordance with coexisting public rights in the street.²⁰

According to some authorities, but not others, the right of access of an abutting owner does not include the right to a sidewalk.

According to some authorities the right of an owner whose property abuts on a street to access to his property over the adjacent street, discussed supra § 1703, does not include the right to a sidewalk.²¹ However, there is also authority to the contrary,²² under which it has been held that the owner of the abutting property is entitled to have a reasonable space for a sidewalk, and, where a city council acts arbitrarily or fraudulently in refusing it, the abutting owner may compel the setting aside of a reasonable space.²³

§ 1705. Building Lines and Regulations

Building lines fixed by lawful authority must be observed by an abutting owner; and, unless authorized by law, he may not build beyond the street line.

Unless restricted by agreement, restrictions in the deed, or valid public regulation, the owner of land may build on it as near the street line as he pleases.²⁴ Building lines fixed by lawful authority must be observed by an abutting owner;²⁵ and, unless

In Texas

(1) The text rule finds support in some decisions.—Watland v. Whitham & Co., Civ.App., 261 S.W. 387—Jones v. City of Houston, Civ.App., 188 S.W. 688.

(2) However, a more recent decision, without referring to the earlier decisions, declares that one owning residence property in an incorporated town has a right to maintain a sidewalk on the portion of the street abutting his property as long as he does not unduly encroach on the street so as to impede traffic, and the abutting owner, in the absence of an ordinance regulating the construction of sidewalks, may make a reasonable appropriation of the street for such purpose, since such appropriation is not an obstruction of traffic, but rather is in furtherance thereof.—McCall v. Alpine Telephone Corporation, 183 S.W.2d 205, affirmed 184 S.W.2d 830, 143 Tex. 335.

Maintenance of building over building line for long period of years did not show as matter of law abandonment by city of right to require removal or warrant continuance in such location; and existence of ordinance regulating building and construction and maintenance of building over building line did not create presumption of valid location.—Appeal of Phillips, 154 A. 238, 113 Conn. 40.

Application to existing buildings

(1) The setback lines provided by an ordinance have been held to be inapplicable to buildings constructed before the adoption of the ordinance.—Incorporated Village of North Hornell v. Rauber, 40 N.Y.S.2d 938, 181 Misc. 546.

(2) However, an ordinance may require existing buildings to comply with the building line if they are altered.

Pa.—Colonial Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Porreca, 59 Pa.Dist. & Co. 163.

Tex.—Stuckert v. Morris, Civ.App., 194 S.W.2d 606.

(3) It has been held that the word "alter" as used in such ordinance means a material or substantial change, and that the substitution of noncombustible for combustible support in the front wall of a building, the relocation of the entrance, the removal of a bulk window and the substitution of two smaller ones therefor, and the refinishing of the balance of the old bulk window front with solid brick, constitutes an alteration of the building within the meaning of the ordinance.—Colonial Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Porreca, supra.

authorized by statute or ordinance, he may not build beyond the street line.²⁶ A permit issued for the construction of a building has been held not to afford any protection against liability for violation of a building line.²⁷

Questions as to the power of the municipal corporation with reference to building lines and other zoning and building regulations are discussed supra §§ 224-228, and whether such regulations amount to an attempt to take property for public use without compensation in Eminent Domain § 7.

As encumbrance. The establishment of a building line has been held to constitute an encumbrance on an abutter's property.²⁸

Procedure for establishment. The establishment of a building line amounting to an encumbrance on an abutter's property should be on notice giving him an opportunity to be heard.²⁹ An order establishing building lines on both sides of a street will not be set aside because, when adopted, no final disposition had been made of an earlier petition to have lines on one side of the street fixed.³⁰ The lapse of time between the institution of proceedings to fix building lines and their conclusion will not render an order establishing such lines invalid.³¹

(4) So, it has been held that the building of new bathroom at front of existing dwelling house so as to project into area wherein city ordinance requires front yard constitutes structural alteration of house and hence violates ordinance.—Stuckert v. Morris, supra.

(5) A provision that parts of structures projecting beyond building line on certain date may be maintained as constructed until their removal is directed by council has been held to be the equivalent of an express permission given prior to erection of structure.—Hayton v. McLaughlin, 32 N.Y.S.2d 292, 263 App. Div. 245, reversed on other grounds 43 N.E.2d 813, 289 N.Y. 66.

Phrase "block front" as used in city ordinance respecting set-back of buildings within the same block front, included only realty located on and fronting on particular street, and not realty on the square block.—Alker v. Collins, N.J.Super.A.D., 64 A.2d 376.

Porch

(1) Porch, although integral part of house in a sense, is usually considered something apart from main body of house from standpoint of building line restrictions, where law or city ordinance fixing building line distinguishes between main building and porches, and the phrase "open porch," as used in ordinance fixing front line of open porch, was not so indefinite as to afford no basis for enforcement of ordinance.—Stuckert v. Morris, Tex.Civ.App., 194 S.W.2d 606.

(2) However, a front porch of permanent construction with solid foundation and roofing and firmly attached to house has been held to be a building within ordinance defining official building line.—Lattanzi v. Commissioner of Public Works of City of Camden, 48 A.2d 788, 134 N.J.Law 437.

Majority observing minimum front line

An ordinance providing that, where majority of buildings fronting street have observed a minimum front yard line, no buildings thereafter erected shall project beyond the front yard line so established, was not subject to construction that where there are houses with varying set-backs no house shall be built any nearer to the curb than the house closest to the curb; and where no two houses were erected the same distance from the street there was no established line with which subsequent builder was required to conform.—City of Wichita v. Boles, 135 P.2d 542, 156 Kan. 619.

By property owners. Under an ordinance so providing, the building line in any block or square may be established by the majority of the property owners in the block or square.³²

Record. Under a statute requiring that a written survey containing the particular description of the lines established shall be recorded, if the survey is not recorded the building line will not constitute a lien on the land affected.³³

§ 1706. Transfer and Loss of Rights

The private rights of an abutting owner may be lost by adverse user, and he may transfer his right to the use of his premises within the boundary of a street, but he cannot confer special privileges on those who are entitled to use the streets only on equal terms with others similarly situated, or grant to private individuals the right to occupy the street in such manner as substantially and permanently to obstruct traffic thereon.

An abutting owner is not precluded by any law or by public policy from selling or giving away his mere private property right to the use of his premises within the boundary of a street.³⁴ He cannot, however, confer special privileges on those who are entitled to use streets only on equal terms with others similarly situated,³⁵ and he cannot grant to private individuals the right to occupy the street in

Loss of rights. The private rights of an abutting owner may be lost by adverse user,³⁷ but the appropriation by a municipality of an easement in land abutting on the street does not divest the owner of his dominion over the property subject to the easement.³⁸

b. Use, Encroachment on, or Obstruction of, Street

§ 1707. In General

The right of the public to use the streets for purposes of travel is paramount, and the right of the abutter to occupy them for other purposes is permissive and subordinate; but the public right is not absolute and is subject to such incidental and temporary or partial obstruction by the abutting owner as manifest necessity may require.

The right of the public to use the streets for purposes of travel and transportation is paramount, and the right of the abutter to occupy them for other purposes is permissive and subordinate.³⁹ The abutter may not permanently appropriate, obstruct, or encroach on any part of the street,⁴⁰ although sufficient space is left for use or passage of the public,⁴¹ or use it in an unreasonable manner,⁴² or in such manner as to obstruct, interfere with, or impair the public easement⁴³ or the rights of other abutting owners.⁴⁴ The fact that a landowner owns lands on both sides of a street does not justify his obstruction of it.⁴⁵

The public right is not, however, absolute,⁴⁶ but is subject to such incidental and temporary or partial obstruction by the abutting owners as manifest necessity may require,⁴⁷ and the abutting property owners have the right to make all proper and reasonable use of the street not inconsistent with the rights of the public.⁴⁸ The extent of the right thus to interfere with the free and uninterrupted enjoyment of the use of the street by the public depends on the necessity of the case as far as the individual is concerned and the reasonableness of the use against the public.⁴⁹

Ordinarily, under charter, statutory, or constitutional provisions, a municipality has power to regulate and prohibit obstructions and encroachments on its streets by abutting owners,⁵⁰ and the question whether a thing in fact constitutes an unlawful obstruction or encroachment by an abutting owner⁵¹ and the question of public necessity or convenience⁵² are for the governing body of the municipality, but such body cannot act arbitrarily and deny to one citizen street privileges which it grants to another under like conditions.⁵³

Obstruction as nuisance. The rule, discussed infra § 1744, that any unreasonable and unauthorized obstruction of a street is a nuisance is followed even though the obstruction is maintained by an abutting owner.⁵⁴ When maintained by others, such obstruction may constitute a nuisance as to the abutting owners,⁵⁵ and this is true even though the nuisance is caused by the municipality.⁵⁶ However, not every obstruction constitutes a nuisance per se with respect to an abutting owner.⁵⁷ corporation is usually held to have no power to authorize an abutting owner to encroach on or obstruct the street, but the legislature may authorize structures by abutters which, without such authority, would be encroachments or obstructions, and it may delegate this power to the municipality.

In the absence of a clear grant of power a municipal corporation is usually held to have no right to authorize an abutting owner to encroach on or obstruct the street,⁵⁸ whether on, above, or below the surface of the street,⁵⁹ although there is some authority to the effect that, to at least a limited extent, such power may be derived from the general power to control and regulate the streets.⁶⁰ The legislature, however, by virtue of its general control over public streets and highways may authorize structures by abutters which, without such authority, would be encroachments or obstructions,⁶¹ and it may delegate this power to the municipality.⁶² The power to regulate carries with it the power to authorize the erection or maintenance of obstructions on compliance with the rules adopted on the subject,⁶³ and it is competent for the legislature to prohibit such obstructions in certain localities and to permit them in others,⁶⁴ but the classification of property owners must not be arbitrary or unreasonable.⁶⁵ A statutory provision permitting the maintenance of encroachments until removal is directed has been held to apply to nondangerous encroachments existing at the time of passage.⁶⁶

exercise of its powers has provided regulations and restrictions as to such encroachments or obstructions, it amounts to an implied license to construct them within the restrictions imposed by such regulations.⁶⁷ However, an ordinance prohibiting such encumbrances with a penalty for violation may not be construed as giving a license to one maintaining them to continue them on the payment of the penalty.⁶⁸

Approval by state officer. In the absence of express authority conferred on him, the action of a state officer in approving an encroachment on the street will not override the power of the municipality to compel its removal.⁶⁹

Action by council. Where the power to grant a permit is vested in the city council, it has been held that action by the council, a quorum not being present, subject to the approval of absent members, is insufficient,⁷⁰ and is not aided by subsequent approval of the minutes of the meeting at which such action was taken.⁷¹

Notice to adjoining owners. A charter provision authorizing the erection of minor privileges on notice to the adjoining property owners has been held not to be merely directory as to notice,⁷² and, where notice is not given, the appearance of a property owner by an attorney after the application has been acted on is not equivalent to notice previously given.⁷³

b. Revocation

A mere permission or license to the abutting owner to obstruct or encroach on the street is revocable at any time unless there are circumstances creating an estoppel against the public or the license is in the nature of a contract.

A mere permission or license to the abutting owner to obstruct or encroach on the street is revocable at any time⁷⁴ unless there are circumstances creating an estoppel against the public⁷⁵ or the license is in the nature of a contract,⁷⁶ and the abutter acquires no vested rights by reason of a mere permissive use.⁷⁷ Further, no estoppel can arise from the act of municipal authorities done without authority of law.⁷⁸ It has been held, however, that permits for minor privileges in a street, issued without the power of revocation, either in the permits or in some law or ordinance then in force, can be revoked only in the exercise of the police power.⁷⁹ Moreover, while minor privileges granted subject to revocation are revocable,⁸⁰ it has been held that, where the persons to whom privileges were granted paid for them, or were by the granting of them led to incur substantial expense, which may largely be lost, they are entitled to a hearing,⁸¹ and the privileges cannot be revoked unless, under all the circumstances, revocation is shown to be just and equitable or is done in the exercise of the police power.⁸² An ordinance authorizing the granting of permits for the obstruction of the streets is not, by reason of the fact that it requires such permits to be subject to revocation, violative of a constitutional requirement that laws of a general nature shall be uniform in their operation.⁸³

corporation cannot grant an irrevocable license.⁸⁴ Further, an attempt to grant to private individuals the right permanently to obstruct the highways for private purposes is invalid as a surrender of the powers of the municipal council to regulate the use to be made of the highways of the municipality.⁸⁵

Effect. Revocation of a license to appropriate part of a street to private use does not immediately make the licensee a wrongdoer, but the question arises as to the existence of a public nuisance.⁸⁶

c. Rights as against Use of Street by Others under Grant or Permit

Ordinarily an abutting owner may not object to a use of the street under municipal permission which does not unreasonably interfere with the safe and convenient use of the way or with the abutter's right of access.

Except in so far as an abutting owner may be entitled to compensation for a new use of the street, as discussed in Eminent Domain § 133, he may not object to a use of the street under permission of the municipality which does not unreasonably interfere with the safe and convenient use of the way⁸⁷ or with the abutter's right of ingress and egress.⁸⁸ Hence, ordinarily he cannot maintain an action for possession of any portion of the street or to eject any other person therefrom who occupies by lawful consent of the city,⁸⁹ nor has he a right to interfere with any structure rightfully on the street or other public way.⁹⁰ On the other hand, a municipality in the absence of express authorization cannot grant a right to use its streets in a manner inconsistent with the rights of abutting owners,⁹¹ and an abutting owner is entitled to redress against a serious interference with, or destruction of, his right of ingress and egress,⁹² or

The right of an abutting owner to continue or maintain various particular uses, encroachments, or obstructions of a street has been the subject matter of judicial decision.

The right of an abutting owner to continue or maintain various particular uses, encroachments, or obstructions of a street has been the subject matter of judicial decision.⁹⁵

95. Booths, stands, and displays

(1) Display stands on the sidewalk or street are illegal encumbrances and encroachments unless authorized by the legislature.—People v. Friedman, 16 N.Y.S.2d 925.

(2) Where required by a charter provision, an abutting owner or occupant must obtain a license in order to erect and maintain a sidewalk booth, stand, or display.—People, on Complaint of McLees v. Berner, 10 N.Y.S.3d 339, 170 Misc. 501.

(3) A statute declaring it unlawful for any person to place any merchandise or suffer, maintain, or permit such property to be placed at greater distance than a prescribed distance in front of his house, store, or other building, has been held to permit display within prescribed distance by building owner only, not by others with owner's permission; and statute is not unconstitutional as discriminating against third persons in prohibiting their maintenance of display stands within such distance by owner's permission.—People v. Friedman, supra.

Curb service

An ordinance prohibiting the use of streets for curb service by persons or corporations engaged in business in a store or stand in the sale or soliciting of sales of goods is within municipal constitutional power reasonably to control the use of its streets, and is not discriminatory, because, under another ordinance, hawkers and peddlers are licensed to operate and to make use of streets, where such other ordinance provides that a licensee should not remain in any one place longer than necessary to make a sale.—People of City of Dearborn v. Dmytro, 273 N.W. 400, 280 Mich. 82, 111 A.L.R. 128.

Discharge of water into street. In the absence of municipal regulations to the contrary it has been held that a property owner who cuts his property down to grade, and erects a building thereon, has a right to protect his building from surface waters by leading such waters into a street or alley.⁹⁶ However, it has also been held that an abutting owner has no right to use the street as a conduit to carry surface waters from his property⁹⁷ and that he has no right to run waste water used to sprinkle or irrigate his lawn on or across the sidewalk in front of his premises.⁹⁸

Scales. It has been held that, in the absence of statutory authority, the municipality has no authority to grant to an abutting owner the right to erect and maintain private platform scales in a street.⁹⁹ On the other hand, it has also been held that the city has inherent power to permit such a use where the use does not materially interfere with the public use.¹

b. Areaways, Cellarways, Courtyards, and Stairs Therefrom

As a rule, an abutting owner has no absolute right to use the street for areaways, but a municipal corporation may be authorized to permit a reasonable use of the street for areaways, cellarways, courtyards, and like purposes.

As a rule, an abutting owner or occupant has no absolute right to use the street for areaways to afford either access² or light,³ although in some jurisdictions, in cases wherein the fee is in the abutter, he is held to have the right to maintain an areaway⁴ or basement or cellar entrance⁵ in the street and use it subject to the public easement. A municipal corporation may be authorized to permit reasonable use of the street for areaways, cellarways, courtyards, and like purposes.⁶ Although there is some authority to the contrary,⁷ a municipality under its general powers over streets is ordinarily held to be authorized to license or permit areaways and cellarways provided they do not necessarily interfere with the rights of the public,⁸ and such areaways and cellarways are not illegal as long as they are permitted by the municipal authorities.⁹ The effect of an ordinance permitting abutting owners to use a portion of the street for a courtyard is to permit such owners in accordance with a long-continued custom of the municipality to fence off the courtyard,¹⁰ and to build stoops or stairways to afford access to the houses.¹¹ A municipal corporation may not, however, authorize the maintenance of a fence around a courtyard where such fence constitutes a substantial foreseeable danger to pedestrians or children at play.¹²

Regulation and revocation of license. The use of a portion of a sidewalk by an abutting owner for areaways, courtyards, and cellarways where recognized is subject to reasonable regulation,¹³ and a license permitting such use may be revoked by the municipality at any time.¹⁴ An ordinance providing that permission to use a portion of the street for an areaway shall contain a reservation of the right to terminate the privilege is not violative of a constitutional provision requiring laws of a general nature to be uniform in their operation.¹⁵

c. Awnings and Canopies

In the absence of legislative or municipal authorization, no person can lawfully maintain an awning or canopy over a sidewalk, and a right granted by a municipal corporation to do so may be revoked at any time.

Apart from legislative or municipal authorization, no person may lawfully maintain an awning or a canopy over a sidewalk,¹⁶ and where an awning is erected without such authority it is a public nuisance whether or not it materially interferes with public travel.¹⁷ The legislature may, however, delegate to the municipal authorities the power to permit the erection of awnings or canopies,¹⁸ and it would seem that they may grant such permits under their general power to regulate and control the streets;¹⁹ but it has been held that such a grant is not justified where it will result in a public nuisance or injury to an adjoining owner²⁰ or where the awning is of a permanent character.²¹

prohibition is not necessarily invalid, as being special in character, because it is limited in its operation to a portion of the city only.²³

Regulation and revocation. A license to maintain such a structure as an awning over a sidewalk legalizes a form of obstruction which otherwise would constitute a nuisance,²⁴ and the right is subject to reasonable regulation by the municipality,²⁵ and the license affords no protection unless its terms are observed.²⁶ Where the legislature in delegating to the municipality the power to grant such privileges,²⁷ or the municipality, by ordinance, designates a particular board from which the permit shall be obtained,²⁸ the right can be granted only by such board or person. The authority of such board or person depends on the terms of the grant,²⁹ and it has been held that such board may be given power to include æsthetic considerations in its regulations.³⁰ A right granted by the municipality to maintain an awning or canopy over the sidewalk may be revoked by the municipality at any time,³¹ and, in the absence of express legislative authority, a municipality cannot grant an irrevocable license.³²

d. Balconies and Bay Windows

Balconies or bay windows projecting over the sidewalk have been held to be unlawful, but it has also been held that the power to license such structures may be delegated by the legislature to the municipal corporation.

In some jurisdictions it has been held that the maintenance of balconies or bay windows projecting over the sidewalk is a lawful use of the street by the abutting owner when not prohibited by statute or ordinance.³³ In other jurisdictions it has been held that such use amounts to an unlawful encroachment³⁴ and a public nuisance.³⁵ Further, at least in the absence of permissive statute, it has been held that a municipality cannot authorize such encroachment.³⁶ It has been held, however, that the power to license such structures may be delegated by the legislature to the municipality,³⁷ and in some cases a municipality may authorize such encroachments under its general powers.³⁸

Prohibition. Under a direct legislative authority to make rules and regulations in respect of projections from buildings, a municipality may prohibit the erection and maintenance of bay windows not-

Ordinance void for uncertainty

An ordinance prohibiting the erection or use of any awning, except it be upon a suitable frame and meet certain other requirements, is void for uncertainty, because the word "suitable" has no definite meaning in the connection in which it is used—State v. Clarke, 37 A. 975, 69 Conn. 371, 61 Am.S.R. 45, 89 L.R.A. 670.

Height of marquee

A requirement in ordinance that no part of support for marquee in business district should be less than eight feet from sidewalk bore a reasonable relation to public use of highway and prevention of obstruction, and was not discriminatory, since a reasonable difference in classification may be made, in regulating awnings and marquees, between coverings over sidewalk which are movable and designed and intended to be frequently moved, and coverings which are permanent and immovable.—Laura Vincent Co. v. General ordinance

(1) Municipalities have the power to permit, under regulations that are reasonable in character, and general in application, the use of the street for such purpose.—Livingston v. Wolf, 20 A. 551, 136 Pa. 519, 20 Am. S.R. 986.

(2) Such use cannot be justified by an individual permit not regulated by rules of general and uniform application.—Reimer's Appeal, 100 Pa. 182, 45 Am.R. 373.

withstanding an earlier general statute impliedly permits such encroachments to a limited extent.³⁹ It has been held, however, that a statute imposing a penalty for maintaining such encroachments is intended for the benefit of the public only, and confers no distinct rights on individual property owners.⁴⁰

Revocation. The right granted by the municipality to maintain such encroachments may be revoked at the pleasure of the municipality.⁴¹

e. Excavations Adjoining Street Line

An abutting owner may excavate on his own land provided he does not disturb the lateral support of the street.

An abutting owner may excavate on his own land⁴² provided he does not disturb the lateral support of the street;⁴³ but not otherwise.⁴⁴

f. Pillars, Cornices, and Roofs

An encroachment on the street by a roof, cornice, or pillars forming part of a building has been held to be unlawful, but the legislature may delegate power to the municipal corporation to authorize such projections.

An encroachment on the street by a roof,⁴⁵ cornice,⁴⁶ or pillars⁴⁷ forming part of a building has been held to be unlawful. The legislature may delegate the power to the municipal corporation to authorize such projections,⁴⁸ but in the absence of statutory authority it has been held that a municipality cannot authorize such an encroachment.⁴⁹

g. Pipes

The owner of the fee in the street subject to the public easement has the right to lay a service pipe below the surface for the conveyance of water, gas, and other purposes subject to the use of the street by the public, and has the right to make such excavations as are necessary for the enjoyment of his rights, subject to the right of the municipal corporation to regulate the work.

h. Signs

According to some authorities, but not others, the maintenance of projecting signs above a street is a lawful use of the street, but such use is subject to reasonable regulation.

While it has been held that an abutting owner has no right to erect a billboard or sign over or on the street,⁵⁶ other authorities have held that the maintenance of projecting signs above a street is a lawful use of the street,⁵⁷ although under some circumstances they may be considered a public nuisance and a menace to public safety.⁵⁸ While such use by an abutting owner is subject to reasonable regulation in the interest of the public,⁵⁹ such as regulations as to the height of the sign,⁶⁰ it has been held that such use cannot be interfered with unless it amounts to an actual obstruction or endangers the safety of the public.⁶¹ Where a sign has been properly constructed under the authority of an ordinance and does not in any way interfere with the traffic on the street or with the personal or property rights of any person, it has been held that the municipality may not at its will and for no good reason, by an ordinance changing the general regulations in minor particulars, require its removal.⁶² On the other hand, a sign constituting an unlawful obstruction and a nuisance is not justified on the ground of the convenience of the public seeking a shop of the kind designated by the sign, or that it is a custom of the neighborhood to create such obstructions, or that there are other similar signs on the same street or sidewalk or elsewhere on the public streets of the city.⁶³

i. Steps Rising from Street or Sidewalk

An abutting owner has no right to obstruct the sidewalk by steps rising from it, although when such structures are not prohibited, are commonly suffered to exist, and are not unreasonable, they, while not in the street as a matter of right, are not necessarily unlawful, and the legislature may authorize the maintenance of steps projecting into the street.

An abutting owner has no right to obstruct the sidewalk by steps rising from it,⁶⁴ although when such structures are not prohibited, are commonly suffered to exist, and are not unreasonable, they, while not in the street as a matter of right, are not necessarily unlawful.⁶⁵ The legislature may directly authorize the maintenance of steps projecting into the street,⁶⁶ but it has generally been held that, in the absence of statutory authority, a municipal corporation may not authorize such encroachments on the sidewalk,⁶⁷ although such authority has been found by some decisions in the power of general control or regulation of the streets.⁶⁸

j. Structures across Street

An abutting owner has no right to construct an unauthorized overhead structure across a street, but the legislature may delegate to a municipal corporation the power to authorize such structures, provided the property rights of others are not invaded and the public use of the street is not unreasonably obstructed.

An abutting landowner has no right to construct an unauthorized overhead structure across a street, whether or not it interferes with traffic.⁷⁴ The legislature may delegate to a municipal corporation the power to authorize such structures,⁷⁵ provided the property rights of others are not invaded and the public use of the street is not unreasonably obstructed.⁷⁶ In some jurisdictions it has been held that, without express legislative power, a municipality has no authority to grant permits to abutting owners to erect a structure bridging the public streets,⁷⁷ although in other jurisdictions it has been held that, even without such authority, the municipality may permit such structures, subject to its option to revoke the permit if they interfere with the public use of the street.⁷⁸ When empowered to authorize such structures, the municipality may make their erection and maintenance conditional on the securing of a permit.⁷⁹ The right of an upland owner to build a dock over a street, the fee of which is in himself, out to navigable water, does not involve the right to appropriate the street or to make an unreasonable use thereof.⁸⁰

k. Vaults, Cellars, and Other Substructures

- (1) In general
- (2) Regulation
- (3) Nature and extent

(1) In General

A municipal corporation may authorize the maintenance of vaults, cellars, and similar substructures under the surface of the street, and, where the fee of the street is in the municipality, the abutting owner may maintain such substructures only with municipal permission, and, according to some authorities there must be municipal permission for such use even where the fee of the street is in the abutting owner.

There is a distinction between the right to permit the use of the subsoil of a street by an abutting owner and the right to permit a permanent encroachment on the street.⁸¹ A municipal corporation may authorize the maintenance of vaults, cellars, and similar substructures under the surface of the street.⁸² Where the fee of the street is in the municipality, the abutting owner can make use of the space thereunder for the purpose of maintaining vaults, basements, and cellars only with municipal permission.⁸³ Where the fee of the street is in the abutting owner, in some jurisdictions it has been held that he may use such space without municipal permission, so long as he does not interfere with the dominant easement of the public;⁸⁴

but according to other authority even then there must be municipal permission for such use.⁸⁵ A permit may be arbitrarily refused by the municipality when it is the owner of the fee in the street,⁸⁶ but not where the fee is in the landowner.⁸⁷ However, where permission is required, it need not be express, but may be implied,⁸⁸ and the lapse of time may raise a presumption of a license,⁸⁹ which may be rebutted by proof.⁹⁰ Where permission to construct a vault under a sidewalk has been granted on express conditions and stipulations to be kept and performed by the grantee, it has been held that the grant constitutes a contract between the parties,⁹¹ and is in itself a species of property which the owner may protect against trespassers.⁹²

Covered openings in sidewalk. The right of abutting owners to have openings in sidewalks, with proper covering such as trap doors, is often conferred by legislative authority,⁹³ but, in the absence of such enactment, it has been held that such right is not an incident of ownership of the abutting premises,⁹⁴ although it has been declared that the right may be recognized by long-established usage and custom.⁹⁵

(2) Regulation

The construction and maintenance by abutters of vaults and other structures under the streets are subject to reasonable regulations.

The construction and maintenance by abutters of vaults and other structures under the streets are subject to reasonable regulations⁹⁶ which must be reasonably construed and applied in accordance with the purpose and intent of the body promulgating them.⁹⁷ Thus, when the fee of a street is in the municipality, it may exact a fee for the privilege,⁹⁸ irrespective of the length of time the vaults have been in existence.⁹⁹ However, if a proper permit has been granted for the construction of vaults in the first place, the owner has the right to continue new vaults in such spaces without an additional permit or payment therefor, provided the continuance does not interfere with the use of the street.¹ Payment cannot be required where the fee is in the abutting owners.²

permit is not applicable where the abutter owns the fee of the street and no permit is required.⁴

(3) Nature and Extent

Uses of the subsoil of a street must give way to legitimate public uses when asserted, and a license or permit or permissive use conferring such a right may be revoked at any time when the public interest demands it.

Uses of the character under consideration must give way to the legitimate public uses when asserted,⁵ and cannot become a matter of right by long-continued enjoyment,⁶ or a municipal permit.⁷ A license or permit or permissive use conferring a right to use the subsoil of a street may be revoked at any time when the public interest demands it.⁸ However, where an abutting owner, with permission of the city, constructs, at substantial expense, a substructure under the sidewalk or street, the city may not thereafter arbitrarily, capriciously, or unjustly deprive him of such use by the exercise of its dominant easement or by the revocation of the permit or license.⁹

L. Temporary or Occasional Use of Sidewalk or Roadway

Owners of land abutting on a street have the right to encroach on the primary rights of the public therein to a limited extent and for a temporary purpose.

Owners of land abutting on a street have the right to encroach on the primary rights of the public therein to a limited extent and for a temporary purpose,¹⁰ but such an encroachment must be reasonably necessary and it must not unreasonably interfere with the rights of the public, to which it is subservient.¹¹

Business and household exigencies. An abutter has a limited right to obstruct the roadway and sidewalks in a municipality by reason of his business or household exigencies,¹² as, for example, by teams and vehicles permitted to stand in front of his property for a reasonable time.¹³ So, it has been held that an innkeeper has a right to keep his carriages for the use of his guests only, in the adjoining street, in reasonable number and in a reasonable manner subject to immediate call, when so to keep them is a necessity of his business.¹⁴ An abutting owner may also use the street for the purpose of loading and unloading goods or merchandise,¹⁵ or transporting his goods or other portable articles to and from his property,¹⁶ but such uses must be necessary and reasonable,¹⁷ and such as are usual or customary in connection with the particular business or construction,¹⁸ and the abutting owner may not obstruct the street for long periods each day.¹⁹

Privilege and not matter of right

The use of a public sidewalk as an instrumentality of a business is

Occupancy incident to erection or demolition of buildings. An abutting owner has the right to use the street in front of his premises as a place to deposit materials and tools for the construction or improvement of buildings on his property,²⁰ either preparatory thereto,²¹ or during the progress thereof,²² and keep them there for a reasonable time;²³ and it has been declared that he has the right to close the street for this purpose.²⁴ Further, as a necessary incident of building operations, he has the right to maintain scaffolds, cranes, and similar appliances needed in the erection of outside walls,²⁵ to erect and maintain a barricade or housing,²⁶ and to excavate a reasonable distance into the street in front of the lot.²⁷ The exercise of such rights must not, however, unreasonably interfere with the rights of the public to use the street, or with the right of an adjacent property owner,²⁸ and the use must be such as is usual and customary in connection with the particular construction.²⁹ This right temporaaccorded as a mere privilege and not as a matter of natural right.—Wood v. City of Chickasha, 257 P. 286, 125 Okl. 212.

Use held reasonable

Piling of building material in street to extent of eight feet by owner constructing building has been held reasonable.—O'Neill v. City of Port Jervis, supra.

29. N.Y.—O'Neill v. City of Port Jervis, supra.

rily to use a part of the street for building operations is sustained on the ground of reasonable necessity, irrespective of ownership of the fee in the street.³⁰ One engaged in erecting a building acts for, and on behalf of, the owner, and has the same rights in the public streets adjacent to the property that the owner would have, if engaged in the work himself.³¹ This right, although subject to reasonable regulations, cannot ordinarily be entirely denied.³² Unless authorized by the municipality, no officer of the city may grant an abutter permission to inclose a portion of the streets which he is authorized to use pending construction of a building.³³

Regulation. Notwithstanding the right of an abutting proprietor to occupy temporarily a portion of the street when necessary, the municipal authorities may impose reasonable regulations on such use,³⁴ although it has been held that the power to regulate does not confer the power to authorize an encroachment injuring owners of abutting property or materially interfering with any legitimate use of the street or sidewalk by the public.³⁵ Under an ordinance permitting the obstruction of a street to a prescribed extent for the purpose of placing building material therein during the continuous construction of a building upon the premises of the abutter, the obstruction cannot be continued while the work is being carried on in a desultory and interrupted manner.³⁶ Likewise, use may not be made of more than the prescribed portion of the street;³⁷ nor may an inclosure be erected in the absence of proper authorization.³⁸ An ordinance regulating the use of streets for building material has been held inapplicable to material excavated from the abutting premises preliminary to the erection of a building.³⁹ A provision imposing a penalty for the obstruction of sidewalks by the use of the word "persons" includes corporations.⁴⁰

C. REMEDIES FOR OBSTRUCTION OR UNLAWFUL USE OF WAY

Subject to some qualifications, where the use or obstruction of a street has occasioned injury to an abutting owner different in kind from that sustained by the public, he may maintain a private action for its redress.

Subject to some qualifications, where the use or obstruction of a street has occasioned an injury to an abutting owner different in kind from that sustained by the public, he may maintain a private action for its redress.⁴¹ No action can be maintained

where the way obstructed has not actually been opened for use by the public as a street.⁴² However, a street need not be a public highway throughout its entire distance in order that an abutting owner may recover for its obstruction if it is a public highway at the point of obstruction.⁴³ Although the construction of an improvement renders access to the abutting owner's premises difficult and dangerous, he may not himself abate the nuisance, but his remedy is by an action for damages.⁴⁴

An abutting owner who owns the fee of the street may maintain ejectment against one wrongfully taking or claiming possession of the street, but it has been held that he cannot maintain ejectment against the municipal corporation, or other lawful public authority, or public service corporation, occupying the street within the limits of the public right.

An abutting owner who owns the fee of the street may maintain ejectment against one wrongfully taking or claiming possession of the street;⁴⁵ but it has been held that he cannot maintain ejectment as against the municipal corporation,⁴⁶ or other lawful public authority,⁴⁷ or a public service corporation,⁴⁸ occupying the street within the limits of the public right. Subject to the public easement, he may maintain ejectment to recover possession, where the state takes possession of the street,⁴⁹ but the judgment obtained will be subject to the easement.⁵⁰

§ 1712. Actions for Damages

- a. In general
- b. Conditions precedent
- c. Defenses

a. In General

An abutting owner who has suffered special injury to his property through a wrongful obstruction or encroachment of the street, different in kind from that suffered by the public at large, may maintain an action at law to recover damages therefor.

An abutting owner who has suffered special injury to his property through a wrongful obstruction or encroachment of the street or other public way, different in kind from that suffered by the public at large, may maintain an action at law to recover the damages therefor,⁵¹ as where his easement of access is unreasonably impaired,⁵² and it is immaterial whether the title of the street is in the municipality or in the abutting owner.⁵³ An abutting owner has no right of action for an infringement of the right which he has, in common with all others of the community, to use the street as a highway.⁵⁴ It is not enough that he has suffered more damages than others, but the damages must be of a different character than those sustained by the public in order to constitute a special injury.⁵⁵ However, a recovery is not precluded by the fact that there are others who suffer the same kind of damage.⁵⁶

It is not necessary that the obstruction be immediately in front of the premises of complainant.⁵⁷ Although there is authority to the contrary,⁵⁸ it has been held that plaintiff may be entitled to damages, even though access to his property from one direction only is cut off by the obstruction of the street,⁵⁹ and although he has streets on other sides of his property,⁶⁰ and the fact that other means of access to the property are available merely affects the amount of damages and not the right of recovery.⁶¹ On the other hand, an abutter has been held not to suffer special injury where a street is obstructed at such a distance from his property that he is not deprived of access to it through other streets.⁶²

The owner has been regarded as suffering special injury where access to his premises is completely cut off,⁶³ where the value of the premises is decreased by a diversion of public travel,⁶⁴ or loss of profits has been occasioned to an established business.⁶⁵

Liability of municipality or agent. A municipality has no more right to erect or maintain an obstruction than a private individual possesses, and an action may be maintained against the corporation for damages occasioned by such a nuisance, for which it is responsible, in any case in which, under like circumstances, an action could have been maintained against an individual under similar circumstances.⁶⁶ However, a city, or a person acting for a city, may temporarily obstruct a public street as far as it may be necessary to enable the city or its agent to construct a public improvement, without becoming liable for damages to an abutting owner on the street.⁶⁷

Injury to sidewalk. An abutter may sue for damages for injury to his sidewalk.⁶⁸

Personal annoyance. A person in possession, although not the owner, may sue for personal annoyance from a nuisance in the unlawful use of the street on which the property abuts.⁶⁹

Damage to curbing. An abutting owner may recover from the municipal corporation for an arbitrary and capricious destruction of curbing in front of his premises which does not encroach on the traveled way.⁷⁰

Closing street. Where the closing of a street results in special damage to an abutting property owner, it has been held that the municipality authorizing such closing is liable for the damage⁷¹ and not a person or corporation benefited by the closing of the street unless collusive fraud is apparent from all the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction.⁷² However, it has also been held that a person or corporation closing a street pursuant to a void ordinance is liable in damages to abutting owners injured thereby.⁷³ Damages to parcels of realty because of the closing of an abutting street beyond the nearest cross street giving access to other streets have been held to be of the same kind as those sustained by the general public, and hence not recoverable at law,⁷⁴ and diversion of customers from a place of business on certain property and depreciation of the value of other property through loss of advertising because of a decrease in the number of people passing such property are not proper elements of damages to such property arising from the closing of a street adjacent thereto.⁷⁵ On the other hand, it has been held that the diversion of traffic on which the business of an abutting owner is dependent, virtually destroying the value of the business, constitutes a special injury.⁷⁶

There must be a compliance with statutory conditions precedent to actions by abutting owners against a municipal corporation for damages arising from a wrongful obstruction or encroachment of a street.

There must be a compliance with statutory conditions precedent to actions by abutting owners against a municipal corporation for damages arising from a wrongful obstruction or encroachment of a street.⁷⁷ A statutory requirement of notice as a condition precedent to an action against the city for damages to person or property has been held applicable to an action for damages occasioned by an obstruction of the street by a railroad under authorization of the city,⁷⁸ and, where the claim has not been filed within the time required by the statute, a judgment for the city will be affirmed.⁷⁹

The fact that a particular use of the streets is authorized by the municipal corporation, the signing of a petition asking for an improvement, and various other matters have been held not to bar recovery by abutting owners for damages because of special injuries suffered by reason of a use or obstruction of the streets.

The signing of a petition asking for an improvement will not estop an abutting owner from recovering for a wrongful and unlawful excavation cutting off his access,⁸⁰ and the fact that such an owner was at a meeting of the council, where an improvement was discussed, and saw the work progress without protest will not work an estoppel to sue a contractor for his unlawful act where there is no showing that such conduct had anything to do with the unauthorized acts or the owner knew of the defects making them such;⁸¹ nor will the action of property owners in paying the bill for an improvement affect the liability of a contractor for a former trespass.⁸² The fact that a particular use of the streets is authorized by the municipality does not affect claims of abutting property owners for damages because of special injuries suffered by them.⁸³ In an action against a contractor for injuries to property by cutting off an abutting owner's access, invalid proceedings of the municipal council under which the work was done afford no justification for defendant's acts.⁸⁴ Although a statute provides that damages shall be paid before a plat is vacated, a judgment, vacating a portion of a plat, not including plaintiff's property, will not bar an action for damages for obstructing a street giving access to plaintiff's land.⁸⁵

a. Pleadings

The complaint in an action to recover damages for the unlawful use or obstruction of a street, in order to be sufficient, must allege every fact essential to the right of the plaintiff to recover.

In accordance with the general rules of pleading, which apply in actions to recover damages for the unlawful use or obstruction of a street,⁸⁶ the complaint should allege every fact essential to plaintiff's right of recovery.⁸⁷ An interference with the right of access should be averred in the complaint in such a manner as to show a claim for damages based on an injury different in kind from that suffered by the public in general,⁸⁸ but it is not necessary to aver that plaintiff had no other means of ingress or egress than that cut off,⁸⁹ or the use to which an alley was put before the injury.⁹⁰ In an action against a municipal corporation for negligently obstructing a street, a demurrer will be overruled if any cause of action is stated in the complaint, however artificially expressed,⁹¹ and a complaint, in such an action, alleging that the municipality, by and through its "so-called" board of commissioners, did the work, sufficiently alleges that the commissioners were acting under authority from defendant.⁹² A variance between pleadings and proof of such a character that defendant was not misled thereby will be disregarded.⁹³

b. Evidence

In an action to recover damages for the unlawful use or obstruction of a street, the plaintiff must establish the facts essential to his cause of action; competent, relevant, and material evidence is admissible; and the sufficiency of the evidence is to be determined by the circumstances of the particular case.

Under the general rules as to presumptions, the regularity of official proceedings and acts may be presumed.⁹⁴ It may be presumed that lots with convenient cross streets are more valuable than they would be without such cross streets.⁹⁵

The burden is on plaintiff to show the facts essential to his cause of action,⁹⁶ and to show that the damage was special as to him,⁹⁷ and proximately resulted from defendant's acts.⁹⁸

Subject to the general rules as to competency, any evidence is admissible which tends to show facts essential to plaintiff's cause of action⁹⁹ or the existence and amount of damages.¹ Plaintiff's deed is admissible to show the extent and character of the possession of the property.² In an action for the obstruction of access to property, based on but one ground, it is error to permit proof of another ground.³

Weight and sufficiency of evidence. The weight and sufficiency of evidence are to be determined by the circumstances of the particular case.⁴

c. Trial

In an action to recover damages for the wrongful use or obstruction of a street, questions of fact should be submitted to the jury under proper instructions from the court. General rules as to verdicts and findings apply.

In actions to recover damages for the wrongful use or obstruction of a street, disputed questions of fact should be submitted to the jury,⁵ but, where there is no factual dispute, the court should direct a verdict for the party entitled thereto.⁶

The court should fully and correctly instruct the jury on the law applicable to the issues and evidence.⁷ An instruction, predicating a recovery on the fact that the obstruction was willfully and maliciously built, and ignoring a count of the complaint which did not charge malicious conduct, is

Obstruction of alley

In an action for obstructing an alley, in which plaintiff claimed an easement, an instruction, permitting a finding for plaintiff only if the alley was a public one for a certain distance, was properly refused, for it might have been a public alley at the point of the obstruction, although it was not a public alley throughout such distance.—Beard v. properly refused,⁸ as is an instruction confining plaintiff to actual damages where the evidence authorized punitive damages.⁹

General rules as to verdicts and findings in civil actions apply in actions to recover damages for unlawful use or obstruction of a street.¹⁰ Thus, a finding that one of the defendants committed the acts which obstructed travel in a street does not relieve another defendant from liability therefor, in view of another finding that the obstruction was part of an enterprise in which both were engaged.¹¹

d. Damages

The damages recoverable by an abutting property owner for the unlawful obstruction of a street are such as will compensate for the loss which directly and naturally resulted from the injury.

The damages recoverable by an abutting owner for the unlawful obstruction of a street are such as will compensate for the loss which, in the judgment of the jury, directly and naturally resulted from the injury, and are the same without regard to the form of action.¹² The damages allowed must be special to plaintiff, and damages common to the public cannot be included.¹³ The measure of a property owner's damages for the unlawful permanent obstruction of a street is the diminished market value of the property in proximate consequence thereof,¹⁴ but depreciation in the value of the property is not the test for, or even an element in the assessment of, damages for a temporary obstruction.¹⁵ Depreciation is not the proper measure of damages where the obstruction is subject to abatement,¹⁶ and the damages for which defendant is liable are only the damages actually sustained prior to the commencement of the suit.¹⁷ Successive actions may be maintained as long as the nuisance continues,¹⁸ and, if the party against whom a verdict is recovered does not abate the nuisance, it has been held that increased exemplary damages can be recovered in each succeeding action.¹⁹ Where, however, the court at the suit of an abutting owner refuses to abate the obstruction, he is entitled to recover in the action all the damage sustained.²⁰ While in general the measure of damages for a temporary obstruction of access is the diminution in the value of the use of plaintiff's premises during the time the obstruction is continued,²¹ or, where the property is rented and there is no physical injury to the property, the difference in rental value during the continuance of the obstruction,²² a recovery may be had for loss of profits to a business conducted on the premises²³ if reasonably capable of ascertainment.²⁴ In any event, defendant cannot be made liable for any losses other than those which he has occasioned;²⁵ and, where a corporation has recovered the whole loss suffered by it by reason of loss of profits, expenses incurred, and injury to it resulting from an obstruction, it cannot also recover the value of the time of certain of its officers consumed in defending the corporation against defendant's actions.²⁶

Punitive damages. An owner is not confined to actual or compensatory damages when there is evidence in the case which authorizes vindictive or punitive damages.²⁷

a street in front of or near his property where he suffers special injury therefrom different from that suffered by the general public.

An abutter may ordinarily enjoin the obstruction of a street in front of or near his property where he suffers special injury therefrom different from that suffered by the public in general, as where his easement of access or the value of his property or possession is impaired;²⁸ but the act complained of must be clearly shown to be an obstruction.²⁹ An action by an abutting owner is not precluded by the fact that there is a criminal statute or ordinance prohibiting such an obstruction,³⁰ or that the same obstruction constitutes an injury to his public right of travel,³¹ and is a public nuisance.³² A statute requiring the board of public works to supervise all public works of the city, and giving it exclusive power over the streets, does not deprive an abutting property owner of his right to injunction against obstructions in streets, if he would otherwise be entitled to such relief.³³ The maintenance of similar structures throughout the city does not

Ownership or title. An abutting owner who is the owner of the fee in the street may maintain an action to enjoin an encroachment interfering with his rights,³⁵ but ownership of the fee is not requisite.³⁶ Plaintiff need not show perfect title to the abutting property in himself in fee simple,³⁷ but he need show only such interest in the land as abutting owner as entitled him to ingress to, and egress from, the property.³⁸ The easements of an abutter in the street are appurtenant to the land and cannot be reserved to him on a sale of the property so as to enable him to enjoin the commission of trespass thereon occurring after the sale.³⁹

Necessity and sufficiency of special damages. It is necessary that complainant shall have sustained an individual or specific damage in addition to that suffered by the public at large.⁴⁰ An abutter is not entitled to an injunction where he is merely injured in common with the rest of the community,⁴¹ even though in a greater degree.⁴² However, an obstruction interfering with access to property abutting a street may constitute a special injury notwithstanding the abutting owner has other means of access,⁴³ and it has been held that the deprivation of any entrance to, or exit from, one's property is a special or peculiar damage to it not suffered by the public in general.⁴⁴ It is not necessary that his property shall abut on the obstructed portion of the way,⁴⁵ although it has been held in some jurisdictions that, where the obstruction is of the street in a portion of a city platted into blocks, only those owning property in the particular block can be said to suffer an injury distinct from that suffered by the general public.⁴⁶

Remote danger will not suffice, but it must be threatened and probable,⁴⁷ and the injury must be material.⁴⁸ Equity will not interfere to prevent slight injuries to technical rights but only to prevent serious damage to substantial rights.⁴⁹

Continuity of obstruction. It is not necessary that the interference with plaintiff's right of access be

Obstruction of vacated portion of street

A property owner on a street or alley, a portion of which, other than the part on which he abuts, is vacated by the city, has no right to enjoin the obstruction of the vacated portion, where he has reasonable access to his property by other streets and alleys, although not as convenient as before the vacation.

continuous and uninterrupted in order to entitle him to injunctive relief.⁵⁰

Existence, opening, or closing of street or highway. Generally speaking, the right of an abutting owner to maintain an action to compel the removal of an obstruction in a street is dependent on the existence of the street.⁵¹ However, a property owner damaged by the failure of the municipality to use land acquired for street purposes may enjoin continuous damage by obstruction of access to his property,⁵² and the fact that the street or highway may have been abandoned by the public will not affect the right of an abutting owner to protection of the easement which he may have in the street for the purpose of ingress to, and egress from, his premises.⁵³ It is immaterial that the city, which had accepted a dedication of the street, had not opened it up its full length when the obstructions were erected,⁵⁴ and an abutting owner may obtain a mandatory injunction to remove a fence from a former dead-end street after a new street connecting therewith has been laid out.⁵⁵ Although a private citizen cannot in his individual right sue to enforce an ordinance, under a statute authorizing a private citizen who finds his property or rights in danger of being injured by the acts of a corporation to challenge the authority of the corporation to the possession of the right or franchise to do the act from which such alleged injury results, an abutting owner may sue to enjoin acts by a corporation in violation of the conditions of an ordinance under which it acquired the right to use the street.⁵⁶ Persons not interested in land over which a highway was constructed may not assert that the ordinance establishing it did not take effect because the consent of the owners had not been obtained.⁵⁷

Against adjoining owner. Where special damage is shown, the owner or occupant of premises abutting on a street may enjoin the use of adjoining premises in such a way as to constitute an obstruction of a street or sidewalk,⁵⁸ but an adjoining owner is not entitled to an injunction where he suffers no injury, inconvenience, or damage not suffered by the general public.⁵⁹ In order to entitle a lot owner to enjoin an encroachment on a highway by an adjoining owner, it is not necessary that all access to his lot therefrom be cut off.⁶⁰ Where an obstruction constitutes a public nuisance, it has been held that a suit in equity to compel removal may be brought by the prosecuting attorney of the county in the name of the state, at the relation of an adjoining owner.⁶¹

Part of street vacated

Owners of abutting property on street had special interest entitling them to enjoin maintenance of obstruction on portion of street vacated.—Young v. Nichols, 278 P. 159, 152 Wash. 306.

Recession to building line

An adjoining property owner has the right to invoke the aid of equity to compel the recession of a building to the building line established by ordinance.—Colonial Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Porreca, 59 Pa. Dist. & Co. 163.

Customers waiting on sidewalk

An abutting owner's use of sidewalk as waiting place for his customers constituted a nuisance, against which adjoining owner specially injured by obstruction of entrances to his store was entitled to injunction.—Shamhart v. Morrison Cafeteria Co., 32 So.2d 727, 159 Fla. 629.

land sold with respect to a plat showing a street abutting the land has a private interest in the street authorizing him to maintain a suit to enjoin the obstruction or closing of the street,⁶² even though he may have other means of ingress or egress,⁶³ unless the circumstances are such that the street will be regarded as abandoned as between the parties to the suit.⁶⁴

Grade of street. The manner of a municipality's exercise of power to prescribe the grade of streets may not be directed by the courts at the suit of an abutting owner,⁶⁵ and an abutting owner has no constitutional right to enjoin the authorized alteration of the grade of a street, when such alteration will obstruct ingress to, and egress from, the owner's lot.⁶⁶

Municipal permission, authorizing an obstruction in the street interfering with an abutting owner's easement or rights in the street, has been held to be no defense.⁶⁷ However, it has been held that an abutting owner not owning the fee to the street cannot enjoin the construction of a railroad track in the street in front of his property by a railroad to which the municipality had granted a franchise to build such track.⁶⁸

b. Adequacy of Remedy at Law

An abutting owner may obtain injunctive relief against a street obstruction if, and only if, the remedy at law is not full, adequate, and complete.

Ordinarily an abutting owner is not entitled to injunctive relief where he has an adequate remedy at law.⁶⁹ However, where the circumstances are such that the remedy at law is not full, adequate, and complete, injunctive relief may be had.⁷⁰ So, where the continued use of the street will eventually ripen into a prescriptive right,⁷¹ or where the obstruction is such as to destroy the street or other way as such,⁷² the remedy by way of damages will not be regarded as full, adequate, and complete, and in such a case an abutting owner is not limited to an action for damages, although defendants are amply able to pay them.⁷³

c. Relative Convenience and Injury

The court may, in its discretion, refuse injunctive relief where the complainant's damages and injury are slight in comparison with the loss which the respondents would suffer if the relief prayed for were granted.

In accordance with the rules applicable in the case of injunctions generally, the court may, in its discretion, refuse injunctive relief where complainant's damages and injury are slight in comparison with the loss which respondents would suffer if the relief prayed for were granted,⁷⁴ although such circumstances will not of necessity demand a denial of relief.⁷⁵

d. Laches and Estoppel

While it has been held that delay does not preclude injunctive relief in the case of a continuing nuisance, as a general rule an unreasonable delay in seeking injunctive relief may bar the right of the abutting owner.

While an abutting owner's suit for injunctive relief will not be precluded where it is brought within a reasonable time,⁷⁶ and although it has been held that delay does not preclude relief in the case of a continuing nuisance,⁷⁷ as a general rule an unreasonable delay in seeking injunctive relief may bar the right of the abutting owner.⁷⁸ Accordingly, it has been held that the abutting owner must act promptly before the construction which constitutes the obstruction is complete,⁷⁹ or before large sums of money have been expended,⁸⁰ although under such circumstances complainant has been held not chargeable with laches where defendant knew at all times that he was proceeding in violation of law.⁸¹ Laches cannot be imputed to one who has been justifiably ignorant of the facts creating his right or cause of action,⁸² and an abutter is not guilty of laches by reason of the fact that he did not commence an action until after the erection of the obstruction where, until its completion, he was not in a position to ascertain the amount of interference that would result therefrom.⁸³ The fact that an abutting owner has himself encroached on the street does not preclude his obtaining injunctive relief against others obstructing the street,⁸⁴ and the fact that an abutting owner has acquiesced in a partial use of the street by his tenant will not preclude him from asserting his rights as against other persons closing or obstructing the street.⁸⁵ An abutter, however, cannot obtain injunctive relief where the obstruction is on his own land and was erected under a license or grant in writing.⁸⁶ Any complaint which the general public may have against an obstruction will not be heard in a court of equity when voiced only by an abutting owner who is estopped to complain on his own account.⁸⁷

Where a statute provides that no lapse of time can legalize a public nuisance amounting to an actual obstruction of public rights, the same doctrine applies to a suit for abatement brought by an abutting owner who has sustained special injuries from a public nuisance as to a suit brought by the public authorities.⁸⁸

b. Parties

Owners of property abutting on the street obstructed, whose rights, damages, and injuries are of the same kind, may join as plaintiffs, and no one need be joined as defendants other than the alleged trespassers.

Owners of property abutting on the street obstructed, whose rights, damages, and injuries are alleged to be of the same kind, differing only in degree, may join as plaintiffs,⁹⁰ and in an action to enjoin a municipal corporation from removing obstructions from the street claimed to be a private way, persons showing an interest in the subject matter of the suit should be permitted to be made parties defendant.⁹¹ Where an abutting owner sues an individual, he need not join the municipality as a party,⁹² and no one need be joined as defendant other than the alleged trespassers.⁹³ It has been held that nothing short of the grant of an express authority or license to maintain an alleged obstruction, knowing that as maintained it would be a nuisance, or actual participation by the municipality, will authorize injunctive relief against it.⁹⁴

89. Questions for trier of facts

(1) Ordinarily, the question whether the circumstances are such as to justify the issuance of an injunction presents a question of fact for determination by the trier of facts.—Valenzuela v. Sellers, 20 So. 2d 469, 246 Ala. 329.

c. Pleadings

The complaint must allege all facts necessary to entitle the complainant to an injunction, and matters of defense may and should be raised by proper answer.

In accordance with the rules applicable to injunctions generally, the bill or complaint must allege all the facts necessary to entitle complainant to an injunction,⁹⁵ as, for example, that plaintiff's injury is different in kind from that suffered by the general public,⁹⁶ or that the street or other way is a public one,⁹⁷ and it must allege the facts showing the obstruction⁹⁸ or threatened obstruction.⁹⁹ Where a complainant's right is dependent on ownership, the fact of ownership must be alleged.¹ If the complaint is not sufficiently definite in its statements as to special damages, objections thereto must be raised before trial.² Matters of defense may and should be raised by proper answer,³ and it has been held that the allegations of the answer will be liberally construed.⁴ The defense of laches is waived if it is not invoked by demurrer, plea, or answer.⁵

A special demurrer may be properly overruled when the grounds on which it is urged are not supported by the facts of the case.⁶

Issues. Issues not essential to the proper disposition of the case need not be considered.⁷ Where defendants answer that they propose to, and will, exclude plaintiff from a street, the action cannot be dismissed on the ground that no obstruction is threatened, although defendant testifies that he intends to do nothing illegal.⁸

Variance. The fact that the bill alleged several grounds of special injury, while the proof established only one, does not constitute a variance.⁹

Evidence admissible under pleadings. Under a general denial defendants may offer in evidence a deed of vacation purporting to vacate the street alleged to be obstructed to disprove an allegation that the street was a highway.¹⁰ Testimony that defendants did not intend to dedicate that portion of the street alleged to be obstructed is inadmissible where such a defense is not set forth in the pleadings.¹¹

d. Evidence

The complainant has the burden of proving all facts necessary to entitle him to relief, including special injuries, although the circumstances may be such that special injury may be presumed. General rules apply in determining the weight and sufficiency of evidence.

Complainant has the burden of proving all facts necessary to entitle him to relief,¹² including the fact of encroachment or obstruction.¹³ Relief against obstruction of a public street cannot be granted without proof that it is a public street.¹⁴ Under general rules as to presumptions, while the circumstances may be such that special injury may be presumed,¹⁵ ordinarily it is incumbent on complainant to sustain an allegation of special damages.¹⁶ In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that permits were duly obtained for the erection of minor privileges in the street.¹⁷

General rules apply in determining the weight and sufficiency of evidence.¹⁸ In a suit by an abutting owner to compel removal of an obstruction from a street or highway, the fact that the place is a street or highway need be proved only by a preponderance of the evidence.¹⁹

The relief granted should be consistent with the theory of the bill as established by the proofs and in accordance with the law applicable thereto, and, if an

19. Or.—Bernard v. Willamette Box, etc., Co., 129 P. 1039, 64 Or. 223.

Injunction is granted, it should be directed against only those acts which are illegal and cause some material injury to the complainant.

The relief granted should be consistent with the theory of the bill as established by the proofs,²⁰ and in accordance with the law applicable thereto,²¹ and, if an injunction is granted, it should be directed against only those acts which are illegal,²² and cause some material injury to complainant.²³ The court may award damages without dismissing the bill, although injunctive relief is denied.²⁴ Conversely, a waiver of plaintiff's right to permanent damages does not preclude injunctive relief.²⁵ A plaintiff may not complain where the relief granted sufficiently protects his personal and property rights.²⁶ A decree certain in its terms is not unenforceable for uncertainty because it involves the making of easily ascertainable measurements.²⁷ A judgment directing the abatement of a nuisance consisting of projections of buildings into the street, rendered against a person no longer the owner of the buildings or having any rights in the premises, is ineffectual.²⁸ Where, after the decree is rendered, a state of facts arises which renders the maintenance of the obstruction lawful, the decree may be declared to be no longer binding.²⁹

Preliminary injunction. An interlocutory or preliminary injunction may be granted before a hearing on the merits in order to prevent a further perpetration of wrong or the doing of any act whereby the right in controversy may be materially injured or endangered.³⁰ Where complainant's title papers show his right to a passageway of a certain width, a preliminary injunction against the erection of a permanent structure depriving complainant of a portion of such way should be continued until the final hearing, notwithstanding defendant would proceed with the construction at his peril.³¹ Where the abutter sues to enjoin an obstruction to an alleyway leading into his property, whereby he is deprived of ingress and egress, a temporary restraining order will not issue where he has been provided with a temporary entrance.³²

Compliance with decree. A judgment directing the removal of a building constituting an obstruction to an alleyway is not complied with by merely opening a passage through the lower story of the building, leaving the second story intact and extending across the way.³³

Mandatory injunction. In the absence of a statute otherwise providing,³⁴ relief, if necessary, may be by mandatory injunction.³⁵

Suit at law to test title. Where it appears that the final determination of the rights of the parties in the suit for injunction will be based largely on the merits of their respective antagonistic titles, plaintiff may be required to bring a suit at law to test title.³⁶

§ 1717. — Power of State

- a. In general
- b. Delegation

a. In General

Within constitutional limitations a franchise to use the streets of a municipal corporation can be granted only by the state legislature or its duly authorized agent.

In accordance with the usual rule respecting power to grant franchises, and in the absence of constitutional provisions providing otherwise, the state has jurisdiction to grant rights or franchises to use the streets of a municipal corporation.³⁹ Within constitutional limitations a franchise to use the streets can be granted only by the state legislature or its duly authorized agent,⁴⁰ and the state legislature has the paramount and plenary power to declare the purposes to which streets may be appropriated.⁴¹ In the exercise of its power it may allow barriers, such as tollgates, to be erected on the streets.⁴²

b. Delegation

The state may delegate its power to grant franchises to use the streets to a municipal corporation, and it may prescribe the terms under which such power shall be exercised.

The state may delegate its power to grant franchises to use the streets to a municipal corporation,⁴³ and it may prescribe the terms under which such power shall be exercised;⁴⁴ but delegation will not be presumed where such an implication can be avoided.⁴⁵ When such a grant has been made by the legislature, it may delegate to the municipality the power to regulate the maintenance of the privilege.⁴⁶

Revocation. The state may withdraw from a municipality delegated power to grant use of its streets and redelegate such power to another agency.⁴⁷ The withdrawal of such power previously conferred will not be presumed in the absence of a clearly expressed intent,⁴⁸ and whether or not such power has been withdrawn from a municipality and re-delegated to another agency in any particular instance will depend on the particular facts and statutory provisions involved.⁴⁹

§ 1718. — Power of Municipality

- a. In general
- b. Delegation

a. In General

A municipal corporation has no inherent power to grant franchises or privileges to use its streets, but such power may be conferred on it by charter, statutory, or constitutional provisions.

44 C.J. p 973 note 45.

Strictly speaking, a municipal corporation has no inherent power to grant franchises or privileges to use its streets, but the power must be derived from the constitution or from the state legislature.⁵⁰ Ordinarily, under charter, statutory, or constitutional provisions a municipality has power to authorize any proper use of its streets,⁵¹ provided they have been opened.⁵² The extent of its power will depend primarily on the terms of the grant,⁵³ which may delegate a broad discretion⁵⁴ or may retain a supervisory power in the state,⁵⁵ and the municipality cannot exceed the limits of the power granted.⁵⁶ A grant by the municipality cannot bind the state beyond the authority granted to the city.⁵⁷ A municipal grant made without authority is void,⁵⁸ although a franchise so granted may amount to a license.⁵⁹ Another municipality may be granted the right to use streets,⁶⁰ unless the statute restricts the power of the municipality to grant the use of streets to individuals or private corporations.⁶¹

In granting rights to use the streets a municipality acts as a governmental agency of the state and not in its private or proprietary capacity,⁶² and is exercising legislative rather than contractual powers.⁶³ Its officials are not bound by the votes of the municipality in respect thereof.⁶⁴ Where the power is vested in the municipal authorities to grant a right to use the streets, its exercise cannot be defeated or restrained by considerations of policy or expediency or mere regard for the wishes and preferences of property owners.⁶⁵

Construction of provisions. In determining the authority of a city to grant the use of its streets, the various charter or statutory provisions pertaining to the subject will be construed together.⁶⁶

Bank & Trust

Powers given a municipal corporation, to grant the use of its streets, by statute⁶⁷ or charter⁶⁸ will be strictly construed; and, when such powers are enumerated, all powers not enumerated are excluded.⁶⁹ On the other hand, it has been held that the constitutional restrictions on the powers of the municipal council and the method in which they shall be exercised are to be strictly construed.⁷⁰

b. Delegation

A municipal corporation having the power to grant the use of its streets cannot delegate such power to others, but it may delegate the exercise of administrative details, and it may delegate to particular boards or offices a reasonable discretion to grant or refuse permits to use the streets.

A municipal corporation having the power to grant the use of its streets cannot delegate such power to others;⁷¹ nor can it alienate the streets,⁷² or abdicate its power over them.⁷³ It may, however, delegate the exercise of administrative details,⁷⁴ or confer on a different body the right to grant the use of its streets as to matters of more than local concern.⁷⁵

Ordinances delegating to particular boards or officers an uncontrolled discretion to grant or refuse permits to use the streets have been held void as an unauthorized delegation of municipal power,⁷⁶ but the validity of ordinances which delegate to particular boards or officers a reasonable discretion to grant or refuse permits has been upheld.⁷⁷ The action of the authorities in granting or refusing permits for the use of the street must be reasonable, and not arbitrary, or governed by whim or caprice.⁷⁸

§ 1719. — Power of Boards

The legislature has the power to authorize a board of municipal officers to permit or license any use of streets which the legislature could itself authorize by statute.

The legislature has the power to authorize a board of municipal officers to permit or license any use of streets which the legislature could itself authorize by statute.⁷⁹ Under charter and statutory provisions the power to grant the right to use certain streets may be vested jointly in two different boards or officials,⁸⁰ or the power may be divided according to the nature of the use involved.⁸¹ Where the grant or license must come from a particular board or officer, a grant or license by others does not constitute legal authority,⁸² and it is immaterial that such unauthorized licenses may have been given customarily and acted on.⁸³

The extent of the power of the board is dependent on the terms of the statute.⁸⁴ A board's authority will include incidental powers necessarily implied,⁸⁵ but a board authorized to grant the use of the streets for one purpose cannot grant their use for a different purpose.⁸⁶ A board on whom is conferred merely supervisory functions has no power to grant a right to use the streets.⁸⁷ A statute empowering commissioners as agents of the state to grant permits to occupy a public way does not authorize a surrender by them of the full use of the public highway.⁸⁸ The "municipal authorities," as that term is used in statutes delegating authority to grant use of the streets, ordinarily means the governing body of the municipality.⁸⁹ "Proper authorities of the city," as used in such a statute, does not include a county court.⁹⁰

Personal interest of members of the board in an application to use streets may invalidate a grant in which such members participated.⁹¹

§ 1720. — Conflicting Powers

Within constitutional limitations, the state may exercise its power to grant the use of streets without the consent, or against the dissent, of the municipal corporation.

Within constitutional limitations, the state may exercise its power to grant the use of streets without the consent, or against the dissent, of the municipal corporation,⁹² and, where the state has exercised the power, a purported grant of the use of streets by the municipality to the grantee of the state is of no legal effect.⁹³ A constitutional provision which requires the consent of the municipality to the grant of a franchise involving the use of streets transfers a portion of the legislative power to the municipality,⁹⁴ and it is a restriction on legislative authority,⁹⁵ but it does not divest the state of its power to grant franchises subject to the consent of the municipality,⁹⁶ and the legislature may regulate the manner in which the consent of the municipality shall be given.⁹⁷ Where a condition of a grant of a franchise by the legislature is that consent of the municipality must be obtained, the legal result for practical purposes is the same as though the franchise were granted by the municipality.⁹⁸

Where the right of a state-franchised utility to use city streets is made conditional on the consent of the municipality, it is ordinarily held that the latter has power to refuse its consent entirely,⁹⁹ although there are decisions holding the contrary on the theory that, if the municipality had the power absolutely to forbid the use of its streets by the company, it would practically have the power to nullify what the legislature has expressly authorized.¹ Where the facts are not within the terms of a statute requiring municipal consent under prescribed conditions, no such consent need be secured.² The consent of a municipality may be implied,³ and in any event a municipality cannot lie by and see a public service company expend large sums in preparation and then refuse the company the right to use the streets.⁴

A municipality cannot refuse a license to one complying with regulatory requirements where the power to determine the grant of rights to use its streets is vested in a different governmental agency.⁵

§ 1721. — Imposing Conditions

On granting the privilege to use a street, the state or municipal corporation ordinarily has the power, in its legislative discretion, to impose conditions.

On granting the privilege to use a street, the state or municipal corporation ordinarily has the power, in its legislative discretion, to impose conditions,⁶ including the payment of particular fees or charges, as considered infra § 1737, and it may require restoration of the street to its natural condition following excavations.⁷ Where the use of streets is by constitutional, charter, or statutory provisions made dependent on consent of the municipality, it is ordinarily held that the municipality may impose conditions on the giving of its consent,⁸ although there is authority holding that, where the power delegated to a city council by statute in respect of certain public service corporations is merely to give or withhold its consent, it has no power to couple its assent with any condition or restriction not imposed by the statute.⁹ A municipality cannot impose conditions as to localities beyond its territorial jurisdiction,¹⁰ except contingently on annexation of such localities.¹¹

The conditions or restrictions imposed must be lawful¹² and reasonable.¹³ A municipality may im-

§ 1722. — Duration of Grant

- a. In general
- b. Perpetual grants
- c. Validity of grants for unauthorized period

a. In General

Where the time for which a use of the streets may be granted is prescribed by statutory, charter, or constitutional provisions, the authorities cannot grant a use for a longer period.

Where the time for which a use of the streets may be granted is prescribed by statutory, charter, or constitutional provisions, the authorities cannot grant a use for a longer period,¹⁶ and periods so prescribed have been held to include the time of construction as well as that of the operation of the utility.¹⁷ A constitutional prohibition against granting, extending, or renewing a franchise to use the streets for longer than a specified period does not forbid a mere extension of facilities.¹⁸ Limitations on the period for which a municipality may grant franchises involving an obligation on the municipality do not apply to franchises respecting which the municipality assumes no obligation,¹⁹ and a constitutional provision limiting the time for which a municipality may grant the use of its streets does not apply to a grant by the legislature with the consent of the municipality.²⁰

In the absence of statutory, charter, or constitutional restrictions, a municipality having the power to grant franchises or permits to use its streets may fix the duration thereof²¹ for a specified period of a reasonable length,²² during the corporate existence of the grantee,²³ until the happening of a specified future event,²⁴ or until revoked by the municipality.²⁵ The franchise or easement of way in the streets need not necessarily be limited to the period of years for which the grantee has been incorporated.²⁶ Where a municipality is authorized to impose conditions for its consent to the use of its streets by a public utility franchised by the state, the municipality may limit the period for which its consent is given.²⁷

power to grant use of its streets are not construed as giving it power to grant a perpetual franchise or a permanent license to occupy the streets.

As a general rule, charter, constitutional, or statutory provisions giving a municipal corporation general power to grant use of its streets are not construed as giving it power to grant a perpetual franchise²⁹ or a permanent license to occupy the streets,³⁰ but such general power has been construed as including the power to grant a perpetual franchise for use of the streets.³¹ There is authority to the effect that the municipality may grant a franchise perpetual as far as it is concerned but subject to the reserved power of the state to revoke,³² and other authority holding that a municipality may grant a franchise perpetual except where the city revokes it under the power of eminent domain.³³

The municipality possesses power to grant a perpetual franchise for use of its streets where expressly authorized.³⁴

c. Validity of Grants for Unauthorized Period

Where statute or constitution prescribes a time limit for street franchises, an indefinite franchise is valid as presumptively for the time limit allowed.

lowed,³⁵ but a franchise for a definite time in excess of the limit set is wholly invalid according to some authority,³⁶ although according to other authority it is invalid only as to the excess.³⁷ The fact that a grant in terms perpetual and void as to the perpetual phase is valid for the period fixed by law as a proper duration has been affirmed by some authorities³⁸ and denied by others.³⁹

Trust for inhabitants

Power to grant franchise, whether under constitution or statute, is to be exercised as municipal function, as trust for benefit of inhabitants.—Blanshard v. City of New York, 253 N.Y.S. 419, 141 Misc. 609, affirmed 257 N.Y.S. 973, 236 App.Div. 663, affirmed 186 N.E. 29, 262 N.Y. 5.

Sidewalks

(1) Municipal corporations have no authority to grant individuals the use of sidewalks which would in any way interfere with their use by the public.—Salt Lake City v. Schubach, United Pac. Ins. Co., Intervener, 159 P.2d 149, 108 Utah 266, 160 A.L.R. 809.

Injury to private rights accordance with these rules courts have held invalid grants to use streets for buildings,⁴⁵ a loading platform over a sidewalk,⁴⁶ storage of railroad cars,⁴⁷ abutments for overhead structures,⁴⁸ or any other obstruction unnecessarily interfering with the public use of streets.⁴⁹ Where, however, the nature of the use granted is such that its exercise will not unnecessarily interfere with public travel, the grant is properly upheld.⁵⁰

b. Necessity of Consideration for Grant

The state may grant a right to use a street without requiring that compensation be paid to the municipal corporation.

The state may grant a right to use a street without requiring that compensation be paid to the municipal corporation,⁵¹ and a charter provision forbidding the mayor and city council to grant any franchises in the streets of the city without requiring adequate compensation to be paid therefor does not affect the right of the legislature to make such grants in the streets of the city without compensation.⁵² It has been held that a municipality cannot give away,⁵³ or grant for a nominal⁵⁴ or inadequate⁵⁵ consideration, a franchise to use its streets.

§ 1724. — Grants of Exclusive Privileges

Within constitutional limitations the state, or the municipal corporation acting under authority from the state, may grant exclusive franchises to use streets.

Within constitutional limitations the state,⁵⁶ or the municipal corporation acting under authority from the state,⁵⁷ may grant exclusive franchises to use streets, but, in the absence of statutory, constitutional, or charter authorization the general power of a municipality to grant the use of its streets does not include the power to grant exclusive franchises or privileges.⁵⁸ In order to infer such a power from other powers, it is not enough that the authority be convenient to them, but it must be indispensable.⁵⁹ A statute conferring exclusive privileges on private corporations on compliance with specified conditions does not confer on municipalities the right to grant exclusive privileges to such corporations.⁶⁰

has been granted for a short period of time in order to enable the utility company to become established, it has been construed as not violating the rule against a grant of exclusive franchises.⁶¹ A municipality lacking power to grant exclusive privileges cannot grant an exclusive right in its streets in the sense that every other company is excluded to whom similar rights might be granted,⁶² or that the municipality itself is precluded from competing with the grantee.⁶³ Even though a municipality is authorized to grant an exclusive franchise, it cannot grant to a private corporation the exclusive right to use the streets at the option of the corporation so as to allow the corporation to refrain from use and likewise prevent other corporations from supplying the public service involved.⁶⁴

Gas company. Apart from statutory authority it is not within the power of a municipal corporation to grant to a gas company an exclusive privilege to lay gas pipes in the streets.⁶⁵ Such power must be expressly given,⁶⁶ or, if inferred from other powers, must be indispensable to them.⁶⁷

Effect of invalid exclusive grants. Where a municipality lacking power to grant exclusive privileges purports to grant such a franchise, it cannot be compelled to comply therewith.⁶⁸ A grant invalid as to its exclusive features may nevertheless be valid as to separable nonexclusive features.⁶⁹

§ 1725. — Private Use

- a. In general
- b. Private railroads

a. In General

Within constitutional limitations, and provided public use is not unreasonably interfered with, the legislature may authorize a private use of streets. A municipal corporation has no power to authorize the use of its streets for a private purpose, other than for necessary and temporary uses, unless it has been granted the power by constitutional, charter, or statutory provisions.

Within constitutional limitations, and provided public use is not unreasonably interfered with, the legislature may authorize a private use of streets,⁷⁰ and may permit structures in the street for business conveniences that, in the absence of such authority, would be considered obstructions or nuisances.⁷¹ Where acting under constitutional or delegated legislative authorization, a municipality may grant a private use of its streets,⁷² such as a use for business purposes,⁷³ and it may permit constructions

(1) Custom and practice may be considered in construing charter respecting use of streets for private purposes.—Green v. Miller, 162 N.E. 593, 249 N.Y. 88.

(2) Charter provision authorizing mayor and city council to grant "franchises" by ordinance and provision authorizing board of estimates to grant "minor privilege" in use of streets may be construed together as in pari materia, and as so construed "franchise" is limited to grants of privileges in highways in furtherance of public convenience or welfare.—Huebschmann v. Grand Co., 172 A. 227, 166 Md. 615.

(3) A provision in charter authorizing city to grant right to construct pipes, tubes, conduits, wires, and other electric, telegraph, and mechanical apparatus in city streets and highways, authorized city to grant franchises for use of city streets for gas, oil, water, and steam pipes, and police, fire, or private intercommunicating wires and apparatus.—Salinas v. thereon,⁷⁴ or it may give the right to a private individual to use the space under streets for private purposes;⁷⁵ but the city may not grant a private use which would unreasonably interfere with public use,⁷⁶ which would make the street dangerous or unsafe,⁷⁷ or which would destroy another's property.⁷⁸ In the grant of the right to use the street for a private purpose the city may prescribe the manner in which the right shall be exercised.⁷⁹

In the absence of constitutional, charter, or statutory provisions so permitting, a municipality has no power to authorize, other than for necessary and temporary uses,⁸⁰ the use of its streets for a private purpose,⁸¹ from which neither the municipality nor its citizens derive any consideration or benefit;⁸² but grants for public purposes are not invalid, even though they involve an incidental private benefit.⁸³ In doubtful cases the courts will presume that the use granted is public rather than private.⁸⁴

Particular uses held private or public. Uses which have been held private within the rule forbidding a municipality to grant a private use of streets include use of the streets for advertising purposes,⁸⁵ business stands or booths,⁸⁶ erection and maintenance of private scales,⁸⁷ and similar other purposes.⁸⁸ Particular grants which have been sustained as involving a public use include the grant of the right to use a street for erecting water tanks,⁸⁹ maintaining a market,⁹⁰ and other uses.⁹¹

Where authorized by statute, charter or constitution, the franchise-granting authorities have the power to grant the use of streets for private railways, but, in the absence of such authorization, a grant of the use of streets for a private railway cannot be sustained.

Where authorized by statute, charter, or constitution, the franchise-granting authorities have the power to grant the use of streets for private railways,⁹² although they may not exercise such power in an unreasonable way.⁹³ The authorities agree that, in the absence of such authorization, a grant of the use of streets for a private railway cannot be sustained,⁹⁴ but they differ as to whether a switch or spur track from a public railroad to a private business establishment is a private railroad within the meaning of the rule, the courts of most jurisdictions so holding it,⁹⁵ although there is authority to the contrary.⁹⁶ Irrespective of this conflict, spur tracks to public establishments are held public rather than private railroads,⁹⁷ and a municipality may lawfully permit a railroad and a manufacturer who are abutters directly opposite each other and owning the fee in the street to connect by a spur track run across the street and so used as not to interfere with public travel.⁹⁸ Power to regulate streets for railroads or street railways does not empower a municipality to authorize their use for private railroads.⁹⁹

Patrol of fire underwriters

If services rendered by the patrol of a board of fire underwriters be governmental in their nature, the fact that their performance was primarily induced by private interest cannot affect the question of the power of a city to pass an ordinance giving the patrol rights of way when going to and returning from a fire.—*Sutter v. Street created by common-law dedication

A town had no power to pass an ordinance authorizing the use of a street which had been created by a common-law dedication for the construction of a switch track for a purely private purpose. The building of the switch track would create an obstruction which would be in violation of rights of abutting property owners, and it would make no difference that track was built on one side of the street instead of down the middle, since a city's duty with respect to a street under a common-law dedication is with respect to the whole street and not only to a portion of it.—*Greenlee Foundry Co. v. In Illinois

(1) In accordance with constitutional provisions it has been held that a railroad track in a public street connecting a private industry with a railway system does not remain merely a private track but becomes a part of the main track with which it is connected, and becomes a public highway open to public use.—People v. Block, 67 N.E. 809, 203 Ill. 363—Chicago Dock, etc., Co. v. Garrity, 3 N.E. 448, 115 Ill. 155.

(2) But it has also been held that the construction of a switch track by defendants along a street created by common-law dedication, intended to extend from railroad company's right of way to defendants' property, would be for a "private purpose" and would not conform to a "public use," and defendants could not construct track in reliance on a town ordinance authorizing use of street for track.—*Greenlee Foundry Co. v. conferring the power, a municipality may grant the use of its streets to public utilities, but, in the absence of authority conferred by the constitution or by the state legislature, a municipal corporation may not make such a grant.

Under constitutional, charter, or statutory provisions conferring the power, a municipal corporation may grant the use of its streets to public utilities,³ or it may withhold such use from utilities,⁴ but, in the absence of authority conferred by the constitution or by the state legislature, a municipality may not make such a grant.⁵ Under some statutes the approval of the public utilities commission is necessary to make the grant effective,⁶ but a statute which merely gives the power of regulation and control of utilities to a public utility commission does not necessarily deprive municipalities of the power to grant or refuse local franchises to public utilities.⁷ The legislature may enlarge the powers of a public service corporation as to use of streets as against the city, except where the constitution provides otherwise.⁸ A municipality may grant a public service franchise before the expiration of a similar franchise then in operation,⁹ and it may refuse to renew an existing franchise and grant a similar franchise to another utility.¹⁰

streets with power to improve them,¹¹ or authority given to a municipality to grant public utilities such rights of way in the streets as may be necessary,¹² has been held not to confer on the municipality the power to grant a franchise to use the streets to a public utility. Where a municipality possesses the power to own and operate a public utility in its streets, it has been held that the incidental power to permit use of its streets by a privately owned corporation will be implied;¹³ but authority to use the streets itself for such purposes will not be implied from legislative delegation of authority to grant such franchises to others.¹⁴ A statute authorizing a municipality to grant franchises for the use of streets to individuals or private corporations for the operation of a public utility does not empower it to grant such a franchise to another municipality.¹⁵

b. Street Railroads

Unless otherwise provided by the constitution, the state legislature may grant a street railway company the right to use the streets of a municipal corporation. A municipal corporation has power to make such a grant where it has been conferred on the municipality by the constitution or by the state legislature.

Unless otherwise provided by the constitution, the state legislature may, without the consent of the municipal corporation, grant a street railway company the right to use the streets of the municipal corporation,¹⁶ and, in the absence of constitutional or legislative authority, a municipality has no power to make such a grant.¹⁷ However, the legislature may properly delegate this power to a municipality,¹⁸ and it may require that the street railway companies obtain their franchises from the municipalities concerned,¹⁹ although the legislature retains the right of regulation.²⁰ Where the delegation of the power specifies to whom the grant may be made, all others are excluded.²¹

Under constitutional, charter, or statutory provisions conferring the power, a municipality may grant the use of its streets to a street railway,²² although the street has previously been paved at the expense of abutters,²³ and even though the ordinary public use of the street for the width thus occupied is destroyed,²⁴ and the tracks cross those of another railroad;²⁵ and may grant an extension of a franchise to the original holder thereof,²⁶ although an extension cannot be granted to a stranger.²⁷ The power must be delegated to the municipality in clear and unmistakable language,²⁸ and it has been held that power to grant the use of a street by a street railway,²⁹ or to compel a relocation of tracks,³⁰ will not be implied from the power to regulate streets.

On the other hand power to grant the use of streets by a street railway has been implied from the power to grant or refuse a location of tracks,³¹ from an express legislative grant to regulate street-cars,³² and from power to grant the use of streets to utilities generally;³³ and there is authority to the effect that the general powers vested in the municipality to open, control, manage, and regulate the manner in which the streets shall be used and enjoyed sufficiently authorize the municipality to permit use by a street railway,³⁴ especially where the railway is not operated by steam.³⁵ The operation of a street railway on the streets of a municipality is largely a municipal matter,³⁶ and the municipality in consenting to the operation of a street railway on the streets acts for a local purpose.³⁷

Joint use of tracks. Under statutes so providing two lines of street railway may be permitted to use the same street for a limited distance,³⁹ and such provisions do not necessarily mean that the city can permit only one track for both roads.⁴⁰

c. Railroads

The state legislature, subject to constitutional restrictions or limitations, may grant a railroad company the right to use the streets of a municipal corporation. A municipality has power to make such a grant where it has been conferred on the municipality by the constitution or by the state legislature.

The state legislature, subject to constitutional restrictions or limitations, may grant a railroad company the right to use the streets of a municipal corporation⁴¹ irrespective of consent by the municipality,⁴² and, in the absence of constitutional or legislative authority, a municipality has no power to make such a grant.⁴³ Under constitutional, charter, or statutory provisions conferring the power a municipality may consent to or grant the use of its streets by a railroad,⁴⁴ and in this connection may permit overhead structures,⁴⁵ railroad sidings,⁴⁶ or relocation of railroad tracks,⁴⁷ and may execute a lease for railroad purposes.⁴⁸ It is ordinarily held that power to grant to a railroad a use of its streets will not be implied from a municipality's general power to establish, care, and regulate them,⁴⁹ although there is authority to the contrary.⁵⁰ A municipality has the power to permit a use of its streets by a railroad under a statute providing that railroads may use streets on obtaining the municipality's consent.⁵¹ A statute authorizing municipalities to grant franchises to railroads may be read in connection with a statute enumerating the powers of a railroad corporation; and, when such powers include the carrying of property, the municipality may grant a franchise to a railroad to carry freight as well as passengers.⁵²

Limitations on exercise of power. Where a municipality has been given power to grant the use of its streets to railroads, it can exercise such power only within the conditions and limits imposed,⁵³ and such grants are subject to the existing right of public travel.⁵⁴ In applying this rule the courts have held invalid grants to use streets for permanent railroad trackage,⁵⁵ for permanent railroad bridge piers,⁵⁶ or for the construction of a railroad station building.⁵⁷

Joint use of tracks. A stipulation in a grant by the municipality that more than one road can use the tracks of the grantee is not invalid as depriving the municipality of any of its chartered powers.⁵⁸

Arbitration. An ordinance granting the right to use railroad tracks which provides for the appointment of arbitrators to determine any questions arising with other roads in regard to rules and regulations relative to the movement of trains on such tracks is not damaging to any of the substantial rights of the municipality.⁵⁹

d. Poles and Wires

Ordinarily under constitutional, charter, or statutory provisions, a municipal corporation has power to grant public utilities the use of its streets for necessary poles and wires, but, in the absence of authority conferred by the constitution or by the legislature, a municipality does not possess the power.

Ordinarily under constitutional, charter, or statutory provisions a municipal corporation has power to grant public utilities the use of its streets for necessary poles and wires,⁶⁰ and statutes enlarging the municipality's power to grant the use of its streets will not be construed as repealing prior given powers to grant such a use.⁶¹ In the absence of authority conferred by the constitution or by the legislature, a municipality does not possess the power,⁶² and an ordinance granting such a franchise without the authority of the legislature cannot be sustained as an exercise of the police power.⁶³ The power may be implied from general power to regulate the streets.⁶⁴

Joint use. The right of a company using poles in its business to use the street may be made conditional on its permitting the use of such poles to be shared by another company,⁶⁵ or reserving positions on the poles for the municipality.⁶⁶

Distribution system

The statute providing that municipal corporations may grant to individuals or private corporations the authority to erect electric light or power plants with necessary poles, etc., contemplates the granting of a franchise for the operation of a distribution system.—Central States Electric Co. v. The word "mechanical" in charter, authorizing city to grant right to construct pipes, tubes, conduits,

e. Underground Conduits

Ordinarily under constitution, charter, or statute a municipal corporation has the power to grant to public utilities the use of its streets for necessary underground conduits, but it does not possess the power where it has not been conferred by the constitution or by the state legislature.

Ordinarily under constitution, charter, or statute a municipal corporation has the power to grant to public utilities the use of its streets for necessary underground conduits.⁶⁷ A municipality has no inherent power to grant such a use,⁶⁸ and it does not possess the power where it has not been conferred by the constitution or by the state legislature.⁶⁹ The power may be implied from a statutory requirement that no company shall occupy the streets of a municipality unless the corporate authorities have assented thereto,⁷⁰ or from the general power given by the legislature to a municipality to control its streets and regulate the manner of their use.⁷¹

The power to prescribe the manner in which any privilege granted for digging up streets to lay pipes shall be exercised does not authorize a municipality to make an original grant of such privileges,⁷² and a statute authorizing municipalities to grant the use of streets for light, heat, and power will not authorize a grant for the laying of pneumatic tubes used to carry packages by compressed air.⁷³ A grant to an individual is void where the statute provides only for grants to domestic pipe-line corporations.⁷⁴

Under statute a public utility may be given power to lay underground conduits in the streets without obtaining municipal consent.⁷⁵ The grant of privileges to lay underground conduits has been held invalid where the ordinance failed to reserve to the municipality the privilege of regulating and limiting charges.⁷⁶

§ 1727. — Miscellaneous Uses

In accordance with the rule that a municipal corporation has no inherent power to grant franchises or privileges to use its streets, it has been held that a municipality has no power to grant the use of its streets for various purposes in the absence of general or special authorization by constitutional, charter, or statutory provisions.

In accordance with the rule that a municipal corporation has no inherent power to grant franchises or privileges to use its streets, as discussed supra § 1718, it has been held that a municipality, in the absence of general or special authorization by constitutional, charter, or statutory provisions, has no power to grant the right to use its streets for newsstands,⁷⁷ or garbage incinerators,⁷⁸ or to authorize the use of the public streets for the purpose of holding thereon a carnival or street fair,⁷⁹ especially when features are included which might endanger persons lawfully on the streets.⁸⁰ On the other hand, where such authorization has been conferred, a municipality may grant the right to use its streets

The legislature may prescribe the manner in which a municipal franchise or license to use streets shall be granted, and a statute prescribing such procedure is usually mandatory and exclusive.

§ 1729. — Award on Competitive Bidding

A constitutional or statutory provision that a franchise for the use of the streets or other public ways of a municipal corporation can be granted only by award to the highest or highest and best bidder after advertisement is mandatory and exclusive of all other methods of granting franchises.

In some jurisdictions it is provided by the constitution or by statute that a franchise for the use of the streets or other public ways of a municipal corporation can be granted only by award to the highest or highest and best bidder after advertisement, and such a requirement is mandatory and exclusive of all other methods of granting franchises.³ Provisions for competitive bidding must be strictly complied with,⁴ and the conditions attached to the sale or the requirements demanded of the bidder must not be so unreasonable as to preclude competitive bidding.⁵ The city council may not arbitrarily or corruptly reject all bids and thereby escape the obligation to award the franchise to the highest and best bidder.⁶ A statute requiring a sale to the highest bidder must, in the absence of anything to the contrary in the statute, be held to contemplate the

Use for business of utility

(1) Charter provision requiring three-fourths vote of board of estimates to grant a "franchise" uses quoted word as meaning use of streets by public service companies in connection with sale of services or facilities to public generally.—Goldstein v. LaGuardia, 43 N.Y.S.2d 202, 180 Misc. 738.

(2) A "franchise" within charter of city providing that no franchise or right to occupy or use streets shall be granted except by ordinance, submitted to voters, connotes the right of a public utility to make use of the city streets for the purpose of carrying on the business in which it is generally engaged.—Washington Fruit & Produce Co. v. City of Yakima, 100 P.2d 8, 8 Wash.2d 152, 128 A.L.R. 159, opinion adhered to 103 P.2d 1106, 8 Wash.2d 152.

An ordinance granting plaintiff exclusive right to collect garbage within city for a certain period did not grant a franchise, within statute providing that an ordinance granting a franchise shall not be passed less than thirty days after its introduction, and, therefore, ordinance was not invalid because it was passed less than thirty days after its introduction.—City Sanitary Service Co. v. Rausch, 117 P.2d 225, 10 Wash.2d 446.

Slum clearance project necessitating closing and taking over by redevelopment company of streets within the area and authorizing company to construct and use conduits under streets for heat and other utilities did not involve granting of a franchise for which charter requires three-fourths vote of board of estimate.—Goldstein v. LaGuardia, 43 N.Y.S.2d 202, 180 Misc. 738.

Exclusive franchise

Ordinance granting public utility right to use streets was held not invalid because not enacted in compliance with statute governing granting of exclusive franchises, where franchise granted was not exclusive.—Town of Brookland v. Broad River Power Co., 173 S.E. 71, 172 S.C. 115.

Constitutional or statutory provisions requiring due advertisement of the sale are intended to afford every person who desires to bid a full opportunity to do so,⁸ but such provisions should be liberally construed.⁹ Although a sale is made after the time fixed by ordinance, it may be ratified and accepted by a subsequent resolution.¹⁰ An ordinance granting a franchise is not invalidated by the fact that, after proposals for the franchise have been advertised and a bid accepted, the city with the consent of the successful bidder substitutes in the ordinance a rate lower than that contained in the proposals and more favorable to consumers.¹¹

A statute which requires the sale of a franchise to the highest bidder is invalid where the state constitution prohibits the grant of an exclusive franchise, for if a grant were made to the highest bidder such bidder would necessarily secure an exclusive right to the exercise of the franchise.¹²

Existing franchises. A constitutional or statutory provision which requires competitive bidding before a municipality is authorized to grant a franchise does not require an advertisement for bids before a town can make a contract with reference to an existing franchise.¹³ The enactment of an ordinance relieving the company from an obligation imposed by its franchise¹⁴ or amending an existing franchise so as to increase the rates which the company is authorized to charge during the existence of the franchise¹⁵ is not the granting of a franchise within a provision requiring an advertisement for bids before any franchise is granted.

Some statutes require that on or before the expiration of a franchise the city shall conduct a sale, on competitive bidding, of a similar franchise,¹⁶ and the validity of such statutes has been upheld.¹⁷ Under such a statute the city must offer a franchise nearly corresponding to, resembling, or having a general likeness to, the old franchise,¹⁸ but the statute does not prevent a change in the terms of the new franchise to meet new conditions in the city.¹⁹ A provision as to the time the sale should be conducted before the expiration of the existing franchise has been held to be merely directory,²⁰ but other provisions are held to be mandatory.²¹

The proceeds of the sale of a franchise are to be regarded as proceeds of a sale of property of the municipal corporation,²² and are to be disposed of as provided by law in the case of funds so derived.²³

Rights created

Statute requiring governing boards of cities to provide for sale of franchise similar to expiring franchise, unless no public necessity for utility exists and discontinuance of service is desired, created public right for benefit of inhabitants of city and private right for benefit of utility holding expiring franchise.—City of Paris v. Kentucky Utilities Co., supra.

service corporations to be submitted to the people, the ratification by the electors is a condition precedent to the right of such corporations to occupy the streets.

Where a statute or the constitution requires ordinances authorizing certain uses of streets by public service corporations to be submitted to the people, the ratification by the electors is a condition precedent to the right of such corporations to occupy the streets.²⁴ Such provisions, being intended to protect the interests of the people, should be liberally construed to effectuate their intention.²⁵ Only a grant of the nature specified by the charter or statute need be submitted to popular vote,²⁶ and a charter or statutory provision requiring a referendum in case of grant of a franchise does not apply to a grant which amounts to no more than a mere revocable license or privilege²⁷ or to a contract which is not a franchise.²⁸ Such a requirement applies to an original franchise, or to a renewal or extension of the period for which a grant has been made,²⁹ but does not apply to a mere extension or enlargement of the facilities which the franchise holder employs in exercising a power previously granted,³⁰ although, on the other hand, a provision expressly made applicable to any extension or enlargement of powers previously granted has been held to require submission of any modification of the terms of the grant which may make its exercise more valuable to the grantee or more onerous to the city or its citizens.³¹

Petition for election. The term "property owners" in a statute which requires the granting of a franchise to be submitted to the electors on the petition of a certain number of property owners has been construed to include owners of personalty as well as owners of real estate.³² Where the constitution rests the right to prescribe the regulations for franchise elections in the legislature, a statute specifying the number of voters required to sign the petition for a franchise election has been held to control over conflicting provisions of a home-rule charter.³³ Signers of a petition for a franchise election may withdraw their names before final action on the petition,³⁴ but, under a statute requiring a franchise election to be called if petitioned for by a stated proportion of the legal electors within a certain number of days from a fixed time, it has been held that signatures to such petition cannot be withdrawn at the pleasure of the signers after the expiration of such period.³⁵ A statute relating to election contests generally has been held to be inapplicable in an action to enjoin a franchise elec-

The word "franchise," in statute prohibiting city from granting franchise without first submitting application therefor to resident freeholders, is used in same sense as in state constitution, classifying franchise as property subject to taxation as such, and signifies special privilege, conferred by government on certain person, association, or corporation, as distinguished from privileges conferred on people generally.—Glodt v. City of Missoula, Mont., 190 P.2d 545.

Proposed ordinance rejected by council

Where the statute provides for the submission of an ordinance granting a franchise to popular vote, a proposed ordinance which the city council has refused to pass may not be submitted to popular vote.—McCutcheon v. Wozencraft, 294 S.W. 1105, 116 Tex. 440.

§ 1731. Requisites and Validity of Grant in General

The grant or license must be in strict conformity with the provisions of the statute or charter authorizing it.

The grant or license must be in strict conformity with the provisions of the statute or charter authorizing it,³⁷ and, where based on the petition of property owners, it must not exceed the privilege sought by the petition.³⁸ Franchises granted to public utilities should be formal and definite.³⁹ A grant to a utility to use the streets to furnish services which the utility has no power under its charter to furnish has been held to be void.⁴⁰ The invalidity of an ordinance carries with it a provision requiring the municipality to take and pay for certain things to be furnished.⁴¹

Acceptance. A grant of a franchise does not become operative until the grantee has accepted it.⁴² If a permit amounts to no more than a municipal license, it becomes binding on the municipality when acted on by the licensee by constructing its structures in the streets.⁴³

Bribery. Consent of borough authorities to the use of its streets by a public utility company obtained by bribery is invalid.⁴⁴

§ 1732. Bond for Compliance with Franchise

A statute providing that a bond in favor of the municipal corporation shall be filed by the grantee of a franchise or right to use the streets has been construed to be directory.

A statute providing that a bond in favor of the municipal corporation shall be filed by the grantee of a franchise or right to use the streets has been construed to be directory because not of the essence of the grant.⁴⁵ A bond executed by a person other than the grantee of a franchise does not comply with an ordinance requiring the grantee to execute a bond.⁴⁶ Failure of the grantee to file a bond as required by the ordinance granting the franchise may render the franchise voidable at the discretion of the city.⁴⁷

§ 1733. Construction and Operation

- a. In general
- b. Terms and conditions as contractual

a. In General

Grants of rights in streets are to be construed in accordance with the reasonable meaning of the language in which they are expressed. Ambiguities will be construed against the grantee and in favor of the public.

Grants of rights in streets are to be construed in accordance with the reasonable meaning of the language in which they are expressed,⁴⁸ and are not to be construed as including permission to do acts outside the rights conferred;⁴⁹ but the express grant of a distinct right or privilege implies license to do whatever is reasonably necessary to its enjoyment.⁵⁰ The rules governing construction of municipal contracts in general are applicable to the construction to comply with obligation the best it could.—Commonwealth Public Service Corporation v. Town of Bluefield, 187 S.E. 521, 167 Va. 82.

Use of switch track of a franchise granting the use of the streets, in so far as conditions are the same.⁵¹ A contract between a municipality and a public service corporation granting the use of streets must be construed in the light of its judicial and legislative history,⁵² and such a contract must be construed and enforced according to the standards of law in force at the time it was entered into.⁵³ Conditions at the time of the making of the contract,⁵⁴ and also changed conditions,⁵⁵ should, in proper cases, be considered by the court. When the language is reasonably susceptible to a construction that renders the franchise valid, such construction should be adopted.⁵⁶

Ambiguities, if any, in the grant of the use of the streets, will be construed strictly against the grantee and liberally in favor of the public,⁵⁷ what is not unequivocally granted being withheld, and nothing passing by implication save what is necessary to effect the obvious intent of the grant.⁵⁸ However, a city ordinance restrictive of the use of streets by a public service corporation, and penal in its nature, as one prescribing a fine for its violation, must be strictly construed.⁵⁹ An ordinance granting the use of streets can only give such rights as the common council has power to grant.⁶⁰ A grant of the right to use the streets is taken subject to the implied condition that the city has the full and unconditional power to make improvements in its streets⁶¹ and to make such use of the streets as might be necessary to protect the public health and safety,⁶² and it is taken subject to the concurrent use of the streets by the public.⁶³

Statutes as part of contract. Existing statutes or charter provisions become a part of the contract between cities and public service corporations which have been granted a franchise to use the streets,⁶⁴ and in the construction of the grant it is proper to consider the existing state of the statutory law.⁶⁵

Acts with respect to the same subject matter, although of different dates and by different general assemblies, are pari materia and must be construed together.⁶⁶ Statutes will not be construed as retrospective so as to apply to franchises in existence at the time of the enactment of the statutes in the absence of an expressed intention of the legislature that the statutes shall operate retrospectively.⁶⁷

Legislative character. The grant of a right to use the public streets is directly or indirectly the act of the state,⁶⁸ and being of a governmental or legislative character is, where made by the city under a charter power, to be construed as though it were direct from the legislature.⁶⁹

b. Terms and Conditions as Contractual

The grant and acceptance of a franchise for the use of streets constitute a contract.

The grant and acceptance of a franchise for the use of streets constitute a contract,⁷⁰ and on acceptance conditions attached to the grant become binding on the grantee,⁷¹ subject to restrictions imposed by the constitution or statutes.⁷² So if the company petitions for the right to use a street on certain terms, and the terms are accepted by the city, it constitutes a contract.⁷³ A grant of a right to use the streets may be a contract on acceptance, although it is not a franchise.⁷⁴ The breach by the municipality of terms for the benefit of both parties releases a licensee from the duty to comply with such conditions.⁷⁵

A grant on acceptance is binding, according to some authorities, even though the municipality was without power to exact such conditions;⁷⁶ but according to other authorities an attempt to impose an ultra vires condition is regarded as a mere nullity,⁷⁷ and if it is divisible the unlawful or invalid part of the condition may be disregarded, leaving the remaining part unaffected.⁷⁸ The fact that the city has construed an ambiguous contract in a certain manner does not necessarily preclude it from subsequently contending that the contract should be construed in another manner.⁷⁹

A grant by the state or the municipal corporation to a private corporation of a right to use the streets of the municipality in a way not common to the public at large may constitute the grant of a franchise.

A grant by the state or the municipal corporation to a private corporation of a right to use the streets of the municipality in a way not common to the public at large may constitute the grant of a franchise.⁸⁰ A franchise for the use of the streets is in the nature of a special privilege;⁸¹ it is the right to use the street in a way which, except for the grant, would be a trespass⁸² or a public nuisance,⁸³ and it may include any right to use the streets which the duly constituted authorities may lawfully confer.⁸⁴ The rule has been announced that the franchise consists in the right to occupy the streets for a public purpose as distinguished from the actual occupancy thereof.⁸⁵ Not every right or privilege to use public streets is a franchise,⁸⁶ and a privilege to use the streets temporarily for a private purpose is a license rather than a franchise.⁸⁷ A grant of a privilege in two separate railroad companies to connect their tracks with a street track is a joint license.⁸⁸

Property right. A franchise to use the streets is a property right⁸⁹ according to the decisions

Proprietary interest

Since the state has no proprietary interest in the streets of a city dedicated to public use, and its power to grant to a private corporation an easement over streets not common to the public at large is limited to such power as it possesses in its sovereign capacity to grant a franchise, a grant by the state does not confer a proprietary interest but only a franchise.—San Francisco v. Electric utility

(1) Contract whereby utility was to furnish city electric current, to be delivered and metered at city's power plant, and in which the use of the streets was merely incidental to the performance of the contract was held not to be a franchise within charter restrictions on granting franchises.—Northern States Power Co. v. City of Granite Falls, 242 N.W. 714, 186 Minn. 209.

(2) Where a city undertakes to supply a public need, and to that end purchases the necessary service from a utility, the city is regarded as merely authorizing the use of the streets as an incident to the delivery of service to itself, and not as granting the utility a franchise to use the streets for general business purposes.—Washington Fruit & Produce Co. v. City of Yakima, 100 P.2d 8, 3 Wash.2d 152, 128 A.L.R. 159, opinion adhered to 103 P.2d 1106, 3 Wash.2d 152.

Right to construct and operate terminal

A contract by which the city granted terminal company right to construct and operate public freight terminal at public market, was held not a franchise.—U. on the question, in the nature of an easement.⁹⁰ A person using a street under a revocable license acquires no property right therein.⁹¹

§ 1735. — Exclusiveness of Right

A grant or license to use streets will be construed as exclusive only where an exclusive right is granted by clear and explicit terms or by necessary implication.

A grant or license to use streets will be construed as exclusive only where an exclusive right is granted by clear and explicit terms or by necessary implication.⁹² Where a franchise to a private corporation has not expressly or clearly conferred an exclusive right to use the streets as against competitors, the grant of the franchise will not prevent the city from constructing and operating a like public utility of its own⁹³ or from granting a similar franchise to some other person or corporation.⁹⁴

Although a franchise is not exclusive in the sense that another similar franchise cannot be granted to others, the rights and privileges conferred on the grantee are exclusive in their nature against all persons on whom similar rights have not been conferred,⁹⁵ and a void grant of an exclusive privilege does not give another company a right to use the streets without the consent of the municipality.⁹⁶ A valid exclusive franchise will be protected by the courts,⁹⁷ and, where an exclusive franchise has in fact and in law been granted, the granting authority cannot thereafter violate its agreement by granting a similar franchise to another.⁹⁸ Conferring an exclusive privilege does not deprive the municipality of the right to subscribe to the stock of a new company whose object is to compete with the company granted an exclusive privilege.⁹⁹

Where town granted franchise not in terms exclusive, it could grant another franchise, although latter greatly impaired value of former.—Richland Gas Co. v. Hale, 125 So. 130, 169 La. 300.

Interference with property

are often made conditional on the allowing other like companies to use the grantee's tracks, conduits, poles, etc., as the case may be.² Such a condition is not a contract with the latter companies, but only a contract between the first company and the municipality,³ from which the municipality may release the first company;⁴ and the right of the other companies to use such tracks, etc., is dependent on the consent of the municipality.⁵ A subsequent grant by the municipality to a new company of the right to use the poles of another company is unreasonable and void where the limits of such use are not fixed.⁶ Where the grantee is required to permit the use of its poles by other companies to which permits have been granted by the municipality, it cannot question the charter powers of companies holding such permits.⁷ Where a grant is invalid for want of authority, the grantee cannot complain of a later ordinance authorizing the occupation of its property by another company on payment of a fair proportion of the original cost and a monthly rental.⁸

Conflicting grants or licenses. The right of the grantee under a license to use the streets is subject to the right of the municipal authorities to permit a subsequent, usual, and necessary use of the street in the interest of the public,⁹ but cannot be impaired by the grant of a right to a private person to make an extraordinary use of the street.¹⁰ As between two corporations exercising similar franchises on the same street, priority, although it does not create monopoly, carries superiority of rights, and equity will adjust conflicting interests, as far as possible, so that each company may exercise its own franchise as fully as is compatible with the necessary rights of another; but, where interference is unavoidable, the later occupant must give way.¹¹

Where the grant to one company of a right to use the streets does not necessarily interfere with or impair a prior grant to another company, it cannot be objected to by the first company;¹² and licenses are not invalid for slight incidental interferences with a prior privilege granted another.¹³ Where an exclusive right is granted, injunction lies as against a subsequent competing company to preserve the franchise granted to the first company.¹⁴ A subsequent conflicting contract may be made valid by a termination of a prior contract by agreement on the day the later contract is to take effect.¹⁵

§ 1736. Assignment or Transfer

A grant to a person or corporation and his or its assigns or successors of the right or privilege to use a street for a public purpose is assignable and alienable.

A grant to a person or corporation and his or its assigns or successors of the right or privilege to use a street for a public purpose is assignable and alienable.¹⁶ While ordinarily a mere personal license to use streets is not assignable without the consent of the municipality,¹⁷ there is authority for the view that, even if the consent is regarded as a mere license, it may be transferred where it is coupled with an interest.¹⁸ Under a statutory provision permitting a certain type of corporation to acquire from a corporation of the same type the latter's rights, property, and franchises, it has been held that rights and privileges in streets can thus be acquired.¹⁹ A provision in an ordinance granting the right to build a railroad to be used by the grantee in connection with the construction of a public building that the privilege conferred should not be sold or transferred is not violated by an agreement giving a subcontractor a right to use the road while engaged in such construction.²⁰ It has been held that, where a company was authorized to use the streets with the consent of the municipal authorities, and afterward transferred its property to another company, the consent of the municipality was not thereby transferred to the latter company.²¹ The municipality has such an interest in a franchise granted by it that it may maintain an action to question the transfer or attempted transfer by the grantee.²²

Construction of instrument of transfer. The mere fact that a franchise to use the streets is not expressly mentioned in a deed transferring the property, together with the appurtenances, of the grantee of the franchise does not prevent the transfer of such franchise,²³ and an instrument by which the grantee of a franchise which includes the use of streets grants the sole and exclusive right and privilege to operate for all purposes under a franchise has been construed as affecting a transfer of the franchise.²⁴

§ 1737. Rental, Tolls, or Fees

A municipal corporation may impose a reasonable charge as compensation for the space in streets which is occupied by the operator of a public utility, or for the use of streets.

Utility of state-wide concern

Maintenance of telephone system within municipality held matter of state-wide concern, in view of long-distance connections, and hence ordinance purporting to require compensation for use of streets must yield to statute authorizing use thereof for telephone systems.—City of Tulsa v. Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., C.C.A.Okla., 75 F.2d 343, certiorari denied 55 S.Ct. 656, 295 U.S. 744, 79 L.Ed. 1690.

compensation is the police power,³⁵ there is authority for the view that the fixing of a charge for the occupation of the street is not the exercise of any governmental power, but is the exercise of the proprietary power of the municipality.³⁶ The operator of a public utility is not liable for payments for a period during which the municipality has wrongfully prevented it from enjoying the use of streets.³⁷

Imposition of charge or fee after acceptance of grant. Where a grant to use or occupy streets for a public purpose is duly accepted, the right of the municipality, acting under a subsequent ordinance,³⁸ or, according to some cases, under a prior general ordinance,³⁹ to impose a charge for the use or occupation of streets, not provided for or authorized by the grant, has been denied. However, under a constitutional provision preventing the municipality from granting irrevocable or uncontrollable special privileges, the validity of a charge for the use or occupation of the street, imposed after the acceptance of, and action under, the original grant, has been upheld.⁴⁰ Moreover, it has been held that the municipality, after acceptance, can lawfully impose a tax or fee on the business of the grantee,⁴¹ or for the purpose of supervision or regulation,⁴² where no exemption from such tax or fee is contained in the grant or contract.

Priority for past-due rentals. A city has no priority over other creditors for past-due rentals on a franchise.⁴³

§ 1738. Modification or Alteration

Ordinarily a municipal corporation cannot arbitrarily make substantial changes in a contract involving the right to use streets for a public purpose, and likewise the grantee company cannot modify the terms and conditions except with the consent of the municipality.

Ordinarily a municipal corporation cannot arbitrarily make substantial changes in a contract involving the right to use streets for a public purpose,⁴⁴ but it may, in the due exercise of its power to regulate the use of streets, make certain changes as to the use of the street under the contract.⁴⁵ By virtue of constitutional provisions a municipality is sometimes prevented from making certain contracts as to the use or occupation of the streets which may not be modified by appropriate action of the municipality.⁴⁶ A reservation of the right to alter and amend has been construed as authorizing such alterations and amendments as are reasonable and necessary.⁴⁷

Except where the constitution provides otherwise, the legislature may modify the terms of an agreement by a municipality with a public service corporation respecting use of streets.⁴⁸ The grantee company cannot modify the terms and conditions except with the consent of the municipality.⁴⁹

Modification by mutual agreement. The right of the municipality and the grantee to modify by mutual agreement a contract under which certain rights and privileges are granted has been upheld or recognized.⁵⁰

Method of modifying or altering. Where the original franchise was granted by ordinance but was not required by statute to be so granted, it may be modified by resolution.⁵¹ A statute providing that no ordinance may be altered or amended except by repeal has no application to a franchise ordinance,⁵² and private rights obtained thereunder may be changed or annulled by agreement.⁵³

§ 1739. Duration and Termination

Ordinarily a right or privilege to use or occupy streets terminates at the time fixed in the grant or ordinance conferring such right or privilege.

Ordinarily a right or privilege to use or occupy streets terminates at the time fixed in the grant or ordinance conferring such right or privilege,⁵⁴ and the failure of the municipality to fulfill its contract to take and pay for the plant of the company which is using or occupying the street at the expiration of the time so fixed does not prolong the rights of such company.⁵⁵ Rights in streets are not necessarily extinguished by the failure of the grantee to exercise other rights contained in the same grant, which under the grant the grantee is not required to exercise.⁵⁶ A franchise for the use of streets granted by the state and consented to by the municipality does not expire at the end of the period of time for which the municipality was incorporated.⁵⁷

Where a municipal corporation grants to a utility corporation the right to use streets without a time limit as to duration of the right, such grant has been held not to be construable as perpetual, although the municipality has power to grant such a franchise,⁵⁸ but to be construable as a license or franchise for the life of the grantee corporation.⁵⁹ According to other authority, a grant by ordinance to a utility of the right to occupy the streets of a city for the conduct of its business has been held a grant of a right in perpetuity, unless limited in duration by the grant itself, or by the general law of the state, or by the corporate powers of the city making the grant.⁶⁰ Such a grant is not perpetual where the statute or municipal charter limits the term of years for which a franchise may be granted,⁶¹ and in that case it has been construed as a license revocable at any time by the city,⁶² or as a grant for the term of years which is specified in the statute or municipal charter.⁶³ A license from both the state and the municipality has been held

Where a municipality is authorized to limit to a definite period of time its consent to a grant of the use of its streets by the state to a public utility, the right of the utility to use the streets expires at the end of the period of time for which consent was given.—Eastern Shore Public Service Co. v. Town of Seaford, 2 A.2d 265, 23 Del.Ch. 199, appeal dismissed 59 S.Ct. 483, 306 U.S. 616, 83 L.Ed. 1024, rehearing denied 59 S.Ct. 589, 306 U.S. 468, 83 L.Ed. 1063.

The franchise of a public service corporation or other grantee, granted by a municipality, expires at the end of the specified time where the charter of the municipal corporation expressly provides that all franchises and privileges granted by it shall be limited to a specified number of years.—Boyce v. to be presumptively perpetual,⁶⁴ and the phrase "so long as this contract shall remain inviolate" has been construed as attempting to confer a perpetual franchise.⁶⁵ A grant for an indefinite period of time does not expire at the end of the initial period of the grantee's corporate life where the grantee has the power to extend its corporate life beyond the initial period.⁶⁶

Extension or renewal. The period for the use of the street may be extended by an implied agreement or continued recognition of the right to use the street after the time originally fixed.⁶⁷ In such case the right ordinarily continues for an indefinite period.⁶⁸ Continued service by a public service corporation after the expiration of its contract and acceptance and payment for such continued service by the city does not operate as a renewal of the contract,⁶⁹ and such continued service may be terminated by either party on reasonable notice consistent with the duty both owe to the inhabitants of the city.⁷⁰

Where the grant or franchise is invalid and therefore does not bind the municipality, the grantee may discontinue the operation of its plant and thus terminate its rights and privileges in the streets.⁷¹ Where the municipality had no power to authorize the use of any street for a certain purpose, the mere use for such purpose by a public service company under an ordinance for the period limited thereby does not estop such company thereafter to use the streets under its general powers.⁷²

Rights on termination of franchise. On termination of its franchise to use the streets, a utility company has a right, subject to the interests of the public, to cease operations.⁷³ It has no right to a continued occupation of the streets,⁷⁴ but the municipality may not insist on immediate ejection and the utility should be afforded a reasonable time for withdrawal.⁷⁵ Where a public utility company abandoned the use of the surface of a street on acquiring a right to use the street in a different way, it was held that the land in the street reverted to the municipality for street purposes without a formal release from the company.⁷⁶

not acted under such license⁷⁸ or where the right to revoke is expressly reserved;⁷⁹ and long-continued possession under a mere license ordinarily does not affect the right to revoke it.⁸⁰ The right of the municipality to waive a provision in a mere license, on the performance of which the right to use or occupy streets depends, has been upheld.⁸¹

A license to use the streets may properly be revoked by ordinance⁸² or by notice of revocation.⁸³

Compensation on revocation. There is authority for the view that a municipality which has granted a license to occupy a street for a public purpose cannot revoke the license so as to deprive the licensee of the benefit of expenditures he has made under the license in the absence of any showing that the structure involved is unlawful.⁸⁴

(1) In General

A municipal corporation cannot arbitrarily revoke or otherwise terminate a grant or franchise to use streets for public purposes after the grant or franchise has become a contract by reason of the grantee's acceptance thereof, except where the franchise is granted under a statute which confers such right of revocation on the municipality or where the right to revoke is reserved by the municipality.

A municipal corporation may revoke or repeal, before acceptance, an ordinance conferring grants or franchises to use streets for a public purpose,⁸⁵ but after the grant of such rights has become a contract by reason of the grantee's acceptance thereof the municipality cannot arbitrarily revoke or otherwise terminate the grant,⁸⁶ except where the franchise is granted under a statute which confers such right of revocation on the municipality⁸⁷ or where the right to revoke is reserved by the municipality.⁸⁸ The reservation of the right to revoke must be clear and explicit.⁸⁹ Where a municipality has granted a franchise by an ordinance providing for a deposit to be made to become the property of the municipality at any time that the franchise is forfeited, and subsequently passes an ordinance revok-

ing the franchise for failure to comply with its terms but providing for the return of the deposit, the grantee cannot successfully claim both that the franchise is valid and also that the deposit should be returned,⁹⁰ but the grantee company is entitled to the deposit where it has accepted the revoking ordinance, even though there was not an express acceptance.⁹¹

The grantee of a franchise may not, without proper or sufficient reason, terminate or rescind the contract⁹² or abandon the franchise without the concurrence of the grantor.⁹³

The forfeiture of rights in respect of the use of streets is not favored,⁹⁴ and the court will not permit enforcement of an alleged condition subsequent, where the contract does not clearly compel such action.⁹⁵

Grant to railroad. As a general rule a legislative or municipal grant to a railroad company of the right to use a public street for railroad purposes cannot, after acceptance by the railroad company, be revoked by the municipality,⁹⁶ at least not without reasonable notice to the company,⁹⁷ unless there is a constitutional or statutory provision prohibiting irrevocable grants of such privileges⁹⁸

or authority to make such revocation is reserved by ordinance or statute.⁹⁹

(2) Who May Revoke or Claim Forfeiture

For a sufficient and proper reason the state, or a municipal corporation acting under powers expressly or impliedly delegated to it by the state, may claim a forfeiture of a grant or franchise to use streets; but where the right to use or occupy streets is derived directly from the state it cannot be revoked by a municipality.

For a sufficient and proper reason the state,¹ or a municipal corporation acting under powers expressly or impliedly delegated to it by the state,² may claim a forfeiture of a grant or franchise to use streets. Where the right to use or occupy streets is derived directly from the state and not from the municipality, it cannot be revoked by the municipality,³ even though the consent of the city is a condition precedent to the right to locate the equipment or structures or to operate;⁴ and a like view has been taken where the municipality is empowered by the legislature to grant rights to use the streets, but is not empowered to revoke the grant,⁵ or where the power to revoke the grant has been expressly withdrawn from the municipality by the legislature.⁶ Moreover, it has been held that, where the state has not conferred the right to sue, the munici-

Constitutional prohibition

The constitutional provision that every grant or franchise shall remain subject to revocation, alteration, or amendment does not prohibit the legislature from conferring on a city the right to grant a franchise without the power of the city to revoke it.—Phenix City v. Alabama Power Co., 195 So. 894, 239 Ala. 547.

6. Ill.—City of Geneseo v. Illinois Northern Utilities Co., 1 N.E.2d 392, 363 Ill. 89.

pality cannot maintain a suit for the forfeiture of a franchise for misuser or nonuser,⁷ even though the municipality is the agent of the state in making the grant.⁸ A perpetual franchise granted by the state cannot be revoked by a municipality under subsequently adopted state constitutional provisions limiting the time for which street franchises may be granted and subsequent statutes transferring to the municipality the right to grant franchises.⁹

There is authority for the view that a breach of a condition subsequent in the contract between the municipality and the grantee of the right to use a street can be taken advantage of only by the municipality,¹⁰ and that in the absence of action by the municipality an owner of property abutting on the street in question cannot complain;¹¹ but it has been held that an abutting owner may rely on the grantee's failure to exercise a franchise within the time specified therein, which by its terms was to cease and determine for such failure.¹² The loss of the right to use streets under a permit, by a failure to exercise it, may be taken advantage of, as against the grantee, by the municipality¹³ and its officers,¹⁴ and also by a public utility corporation whose equipment the grantee claims the right to use.¹⁵

The legislature has power to consent, without a city's approval, to the surrender of a franchise granted by the city to a public service corporation to use the city streets.¹⁶

Approval of public service commission. In accordance with charter or statutory provisions, a city may terminate the right of a public service corporation to use the streets of the city without the approval of the public service commission,¹⁷ but under other statutes it has been held that the city must obtain the consent of the commission.¹⁸

(3) Grounds for Revocation, Annulment, or Forfeiture

Proper or sufficient grounds for annulment, forfeiture, or revocation of a grant or franchise to use the streets may include a failure by the grantee to comply with the terms of the grant, nonuser or abandonment, abuse of the right, the fact that the safety, health, or morals of the public require termination of the grant or franchise, or reasons which are expressly stated as grounds for termination by statute.

Proper or sufficient grounds for annulment, forfeiture, or revocation of a grant or franchise to use the streets may include a failure by the grantee to comply with the terms of the grant,¹⁹ nonuser or abandonment,²⁰ the abuse of the right,²¹ the fact that the safety, health, or morals of the public require termination of the grant or franchise,²² or reasons which are expressly stated as grounds for termination by statute.²³ A default in performance is sometimes made a ground for termination by the express terms of the grant²⁴ or by virtue of statute.²⁵ A failure to comply with a condition as to the time within which the grantee's system shall be completed and in operation has been regarded as ground for annulment or forfeiture,²⁶ but it has been held that the court will not enforce a forfeiture for failure to comply with a provision as to the time of completion of the plant in question where there are no strong and cogent reasons which require it.²⁷

The grantee's failure to complete the work within the time limit may be excused by the fact that such completion was prevented by a suit to prohibit the performance of the work.²⁸ Where an exclusive privilege in the streets for a term of years is granted on condition that the municipality shall have the right to purchase the plant at a certain time, the municipality may treat the contract as annulled as far as the grant of exclusive privileges is concerned on the refusal by the company to sell at the specified time.²⁹ In order that there may be a forfeiture for abandonment by nonuser, the abandonment must be a clear, unequivocal, and decisive act showing a determination not to use or to claim the benefit of the franchise.³⁰

Fraud or misrepresentation affecting the enactment of the granting ordinance,³¹ or matters which are extraneous to the grant or its exercise,³² have been held not to constitute grounds for revocation of the grant.

(4) Waiver or Loss of Right to Revoke or Claim Forfeiture

The state may waive a forfeiture, and a municipal corporation may waive the performance of provisions which it has inserted for its own benefit.

The state may waive a forfeiture,³³ and a municipal corporation may waive the performance of provisions in the contract for the use of the street which it has inserted for its own benefit.³⁴ Moreover, where the municipality is authorized to grant franchises as an agent of the state, the municipal body in which the right to act in this respect is vested may, according to some cases, waive a forfeiture for nonuser as against the state,³⁵ but municipal administrative officers who have no power to act on behalf of the state cannot make such waiver or, by their conduct, effect an estoppel.³⁶ A statute which provides that a franchise shall expire and become void unless business has been commenced within a certain period of time from the date of the grant of the franchise does not preclude an extension of time by the municipality.³⁷

What constitutes waiver or estoppel. Acquiescence in the continued activities of the grantee may be the basis of an estoppel against the municipality in respect of the claim that the municipality had no authority to grant the franchise because the grantee corporation was not properly organized,³⁸ that there has not been a compliance with requirements as to obtaining consents of abutting owners,³⁹ that there has been an unauthorized change in the location of the grantee's plant;⁴⁰ or that there had not been a formal renewal after expiration of the original grant.⁴¹ Moreover, acquiescence in the completion of work pursuant to a grant,⁴² or other conduct indicating the recognition of the continued effectiveness of the grant,⁴³ may estop the municipality to revoke, or to enforce a forfeiture of, the grant because of the failure of the grantee to install its system within the specified time limit; but mere delay on the part of the municipal authorities as a matter of indulgence, which does not lead to a change in the situation to the prejudice of the grantee, does not work an estoppel.⁴⁴ An attempted waiver by municipal authorities of such a provision as to time, made after the expiration of the time limit, is ineffectual.⁴⁵

(5) Method of Enforcement; Affirmative Action

The breach of a condition does not ipso facto terminate rights under a grant of the use or occupation of streets and the mere fact that a municipal corporation reserves the right to declare a forfeiture does not affect the rights of the grantee in the absence of action by the municipal corporation.

The breach of a condition subsequent or of a provision in the nature of a condition subsequent does not ipso facto terminate rights under a grant of the use or occupation of streets,⁴⁶ and the mere fact that the municipality reserves the right to declare a forfeiture does not affect the rights of the grantee in the absence of action by the municipality.⁴⁷ According to some cases, there must be a resort to the courts for the purpose of declaring a termination or forfeiture,⁴⁸ and such rights cannot be terminated by ex parte action on the part of the municipality;⁴⁹ but there is also authority for the view that the failure to comply with a provision for completion of the work involved within a specified time limit permits the municipality to terminate the grant.⁵⁰ Where a statute contains a provision declaring a termination or forfeiture for failure to complete the work involved within a specified time, an appeal to the courts is unnecessary,⁵¹ and a like rule applies where the grant expressly authorizes revocation or forfeiture by the municipality.⁵² A provision that the rights and franchises granted shall "cease and determine" in case of default has been construed as requiring the judgment of a court in order to render it effective;⁵³ but there is authority for the view that such a provision for termination is self-operating.⁵⁴

A resolution of a municipality terminating for breach of condition a franchise to occupy public streets need not follow a particular form and it is sufficient if the intention to terminate the franchise is reasonably apparent.⁵⁵ An ordinance granting a franchise to occupy the streets is not impliedly repealed by a later ordinance which is not so inconsistent with, or repugnant to, the former ordinance that both cannot stand together.⁵⁶ A franchise ordinance cannot be revoked or repealed by a single resolution.⁵⁷

Form of proceeding; hearing. A proceeding in equity is not, according to some cases, a proper remedy to enforce a forfeiture of a franchise to use the streets of a city,⁵⁸ but where, after a valid revocation for breach of condition, the grantee proceeds with the use of the streets, the municipality may enjoin further operations.⁵⁹

In some jurisdictions before the municipality can revoke, annul, or declare forfeited a grant or franchise for the use of streets, under which property rights have arisen, it must give the grantee notice and an opportunity to be heard,⁶⁰ and it must also take action, quasi-judicial in character, declaring the forfeiture.⁶¹ In the absence of such notice, opportunity to be heard, and declaration, the municipality cannot appeal to the courts for a declaration of forfeiture.⁶² Where a municipal corporation is authorized by the terms of the grant to terminate the rights granted on notice, a notice which fails to fix the date on which such rights are to terminate is not sufficient.⁶³

Where the city seeks to revoke a franchise for false representations, it must show by clear and convincing evidence that the representations related to a material fact, were known to be false by the grantee, not known to be false by the city, and were relied on by the city.⁶⁴ Where a grantee of a franchise seeks to avoid the obligations thereof on the ground that he was induced by mistake of fact or by duress to enter into the contract which merely granted a right to use the streets which he already possessed, he must prove such charges of mistake of fact⁶⁵ or duress.⁶⁶

As a general rule the validity of a grant of a right to use streets made by the state cannot be inquired into at the suit in equity of a private individual. In some jurisdictions a grant to use the streets made by the municipality may be inquired into at the suit of a private individual who shows special damage.

Where a grant to use the streets is made by the state, its validity cannot as a rule be inquired into at the suit in equity of a private individual.⁶⁷ Moreover, the view has been taken that a municipality or an officer representing it is the proper party to sue to test the right to maintain an obstruction in the nature of a public improvement placed in the streets by permission of the city,⁶⁸ and that a private individual cannot in a court of equity question the regularity of the proceedings by which a municipality has under duly delegated authority made a grant,⁶⁹ at least where the grantee is in de facto exercise and enjoyment of the grant;⁷⁰ but the right of an abutting owner to sue in equity has been upheld where the alleged invalidity of the ordinance granting the right or privilege is the lack of the requisite petition of the owners of a certain amount of the abutting properties.⁷¹

An action to test the validity of a franchise to use city streets may be prosecuted by the state although the city fails or refuses to join.⁷² Where the grant to use the street is one which the municipality is without power to make, such fact may be inquired into at the suit of an abutting owner, who suffers special injury, to prevent a private injury to his property.⁷³ There is authority for the view that, where the right is one which the local authorities have power to grant, and they have assumed to grant it, the state is not concerned.⁷⁴ Where a village is annexed to a city, the rights of the city with respect to obtaining an injunction against the operation of a public utility on the ground that the consent of the municipal authorities had not been obtained are the same as those of the village.⁷⁵ A statutory requirement that a franchise sold on the expiration of a former franchise shall be similar to the original franchise is for the benefit of the owner of the expiring franchise, and he is the only one who can complain if the municipality offers to sell a new franchise different from the one that has expired.⁷⁶

The right of a taxpayer to question the validity of franchises or grants is considered infra § 2135.

Injury or loss. Ordinarily the person who attacks the validity of a grant must be able to show special damage.⁷⁷ Thus the view has been taken that, even though an ordinance giving the consent of the municipality to the use of a street is ultra vires, an individual cannot attack it by certiorari unless he suffers a special injury beyond that which will affect him in common with the remainder of the public.⁷⁸ So it has been held that a municipality cannot enjoin the construction of a railroad in a street because of irregularities in the grant where no wrong or injury to the city is shown to have resulted therefrom.⁷⁹

Exclusive right. The validity of a grant of an exclusive right or privilege cannot, according to some cases, successfully be attacked by one who does not,⁸⁰ or who is not entitled to,⁸¹ assert a right in conflict with such exclusive grant; and the rule has even been applied against the municipality, after substantial performance by the grantee of the exclusive privilege.⁸²

Objection by prior occupant or user. In some jurisdictions one possessing a grant of a right to use the streets cannot assert the invalidity of a subsequent grant to, or the use of streets by, another where the earlier grant is not exclusive,⁸³ at least in the absence of any showing that the power of the city is abused to the oppression of the holder of the earlier grant.⁸⁴ In other jurisdictions the right of the prior occupant to question the validity of the grant to, or use by, another is recognized, even though the earlier grant is not exclusive as against persons claiming under a valid grant.⁸⁵

Collateral attack. The act of a municipality in making a grant or license cannot be attacked collaterally.⁸⁶ Thus, where the only valid objection to a contract which involves the use of streets is that its duration is for too long a period, and in that respect is ultra vires, that fact does not constitute a defense to an action against the municipality to recover the value of a commodity actually furnished under the contract.⁸⁷ A like rule has been applied where the objection in such action was that the ordinance granting the privilege was void because it gave an exclusive⁸⁸ and perpetual right.⁸⁹

Estoppel. A property owner may be estopped by his acquiescence during the expenditure of large sums of money,⁹⁰ and an abutter who petitions for the allowance of the use of a street by a public service company is estopped to assert that the petition did not contain sufficient signatures where the company has incurred large expense in consequence of the passage of the ordinance allowing such use of the streets.⁹¹ A utility company is not estopped by laches to challenge the validity of a franchise to defendant utility where the latter's conduct in expending money under the franchise was not influenced by any conduct, concealment, or positive action on the part of plaintiff utility.⁹²

Questions as to estoppel against a municipality with respect to grants or licenses to use streets are considered in Estoppel § 145, and estoppel of the beneficiary of a grant or license who has acquiesced therein and received valuable property under it in Estoppel § 112.

§ 1742. Curative Statutes or Ordinances

Grants of the use of streets invalid either from lack of power on the part of the municipal corporation or from irregularities or defects in connection with making such grants may be validated by subsequent statutes.

tion with making such grants⁹⁴ may be validated by subsequent statutes. A municipal corporation which, without express authority in its charter, grants a franchise, may subsequently ratify its act by passing another ordinance recognizing the validity of the grant after its charter is amended and the power expressly conferred.⁹⁵

§ 1743. Judicial Control and Review

Where a municipal corporation is given control of the streets, the courts ordinarily will not interfere with the exercise of its discretion in granting or withholding privileges unless the exercise of such power is abused or is fraudulent or grossly wrong or unjust.

Where a municipal corporation is given control of the streets, the courts ordinarily will not interfere with the exercise of its discretion in granting or withholding privileges unless the exercise of such power is abused or is fraudulent or grossly wrong or unjust.⁹⁶ For instance, ordinarily a grant is not subject to review by the courts as to expediency,⁹⁷ and the court may not go behind official records to determine the correctness of the procedure.⁹⁸ However, where the act of the municipal authorities is illegal or unauthorized⁹⁹ or there is an abuse of discretion,¹ the courts may interfere at the suit of proper parties.

Where the action of the city council in rejecting all bids for a franchise to use the streets is attacked in the courts, the presumption will be indulged that the council has acted reasonably and in good faith for the public benefit,² and the person challenging the council's discretion must allege and prove facts showing that the council acted arbitrarily or corruptly.³

Reasonableness of charge or fee. The reasonableness of a charge for the occupation or use of the street⁴ and also of a license tax or fee⁵ is reviewable by the court, although it has also been held that a grant is not subject to review with respect to the adequacy of the consideration.⁶

12. OBSTRUCTIONS AND ENCROACHMENTS

a. In General

§ 1744. As a Nuisance

Any unreasonable and unauthorized obstruction or encroachment of a street is a nuisance.

Since the public has the paramount right to the use of a street as a highway, as discussed infra § 1758, the public is entitled to use of the street free of all obstructions which tend to interfere with its use as a highway.⁷ Hence, any unreasonable and unauthorized obstruction of, or encroachment on, a street is a nuisance⁸ and a purpresture,⁹ regardless of whether or not the fee of the street is in the public or in the abutting owners,¹⁰ and whether it is actually a nuisance at the time it is erected, or becomes so by lapse of time or changed conditions.¹¹ Acts which would constitute a nuisance in connection with public highways are not necessarily a nuisance in a street of a municipality;¹² and an obstruction is not unlawful as to a municipality where it has neither a fee nor an easement in the alleged street claimed to be obstructed.¹³

Private as well as public nuisance
Street obstruction may be private nuisance as well as public nuisance where individual can show special injury.—Robbins v. White, 42 So. 841, 52 Fla. 613—44 C.J. p 1006 note 55 [a].

Any object placed in the street without public authority is a nuisance if it obstructs the street or renders travel on it dangerous, irrespective of whether the object is merely a nuisance or a nuisance per se, since the essential characteristic of a nuisance is that it imperils travel.—McGowan v. City of Burns, 137 P.2d 994, 172 Or. 63.

Presumption

§ 1745. Persons Obstructing

No person has the right permanently to obstruct a street for private purposes.

No person has the right permanently to obstruct a street for private purposes,²⁰ and a person continuing a street obstruction nuisance is responsible therefor, and may be required to abate it or pay damages.²¹ The dedicator of the land comprised in a street has no greater right than anyone else to obstruct it,²² and an obstruction cannot be justified on the ground that the obstructor is a common carrier,²³ or an officer removing goods from a house in obedience to an execution.²⁴

§ 1746. What Constitutes an Unlawful Obstruction

- a. In general
- b. Authorized obstructions
- c. Particular obstructions held lawful or unlawful

a. In General

An unlawful obstruction or encroachment may consist of anything rendering the street less commodious or convenient for public use, even though it is located outside of the ordinary traveled part, but incidental or partial obstructions may not be illegal if they do not unreasonably interfere with the rights of the public and are not unduly prolonged.

The right of the public to the free and unobstructed use of a street is subject to reasonable and necessary limitations,²⁵ and every obstruction, encroachment, or purpresture is not unlawful and a public nuisance.²⁶ Streets are subject to such incidental or partial obstructions as necessity requires provided they do not unreasonably interfere with the rights of the public and are not unduly prolonged.²⁷ It is impossible to lay down any general rule as to what is a proper obstruction based on a reasonable and necessary use, since the right so to obstruct a street springs from the necessities of each particular case and is limited by the necessity existing.²⁸ However, an obstruction cannot be justified on the ground of necessity where there are other methods, although more expensive, of accomplishing the desired result.²⁹

Ordinarily an obstruction of a temporary character is not illegal per se and a nuisance,³⁰ as where persons other than abutting owners temporarily obstruct the streets in connection with business purposes,³¹ and such an obstruction becomes a nuisance

Determination as to character of nuisance

Whether or not purpresture is a nuisance will be determined according to the particular facts, and unless the public sustains or may sustain some degree of inconvenience or annoyance in the use of a public highway or street, or other public property, there is no public nuisance.—Southeastern Pipe Line Co. v. Garrett ex rel. Le Sueur, 16 S.E.2d 753, 192 Ga. 817.

only from unnecessary delay in removal.³² Thus, a municipality may lawfully authorize a temporary and reasonable obstruction of streets,³³ and such an obstruction does not constitute a purpresture.³⁴

In general it may be said that an unlawful obstruction or encroachment may consist of anything, permanent in nature or continuously maintained, which renders the street less commodious or convenient for the use of the public,³⁵ or which will in the future interfere with or impede the right of the public to the use of any part of the street,³⁶ such as buildings or other structures,³⁷ fences,³⁸ or walls,³⁹ whether or not actually interfering with travel by the public,⁴⁰ whether or not the street has been opened to its full width,⁴¹ and regardless of the question of the comparative benefit of the obstruction and the street to the public;⁴² and the balance-of-convenience theory or the question of comparative damages has no relevancy.⁴³ Thus, where an ordinance is violated and the encroachment is a purpresture, it is no defense that the encroachment does no injury.⁴⁴

An obstruction placed anywhere within the street limits,⁴⁵ even though not on the part of the street ordinarily used for travel,⁴⁶ or placed in the air over a street,⁴⁷ may constitute a nuisance. Since no person has the right permanently to obstruct a street for private purposes, as discussed supra § 1745, notwithstanding such an obstruction does not interfere with traffic,⁴⁸ the obstruction is not justified because sufficient room is left for the passage of the public,⁴⁹ and no individual has the right thus to

Nuisance

(1) Any unlawful act or omission which interferes with, obstructs, or renders dangerous for passage, street or highway, constitutes public nuisance.—Gleason v. Hillcrest Golf Course, 265 N.Y.S. 886, 148 Misc. 246.

(2) An obstruction in a city street must, in order to constitute a public nuisance, be an actual or threatened interference with the primary right of the public to use the street.—Pattison v. Lutz, 30 Ohio N.P.N.S., 371.

(3) Anything which does not amount to a substantial obstruction of a street or an inherent interference with the free or comfortable enjoyment of life or property within meaning of statute is not a public nuisance per se.—Rief v. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co., 120 P.2d 823, 63 Idaho 418.

limit or abridge the paramount right of the public in the entire street.⁵⁰ Under this rule permanent obstructions, or encroachments, unauthorized and of a substantial nature, are ordinarily a nuisance⁵¹ per se,⁵² unless incidental to a public utility.⁵³

b. Authorized Obstructions

An obstruction in the street may be authorized by the legislature or by a municipal corporation where so empowered by statute or constitution, and, where an obstruction is properly authorized, it is not a nuisance.

The power to continue existing obstructions on streets without municipal interference rests in the legislature,⁵⁴ and, except where so empowered by charter, statute, or constitution,⁵⁵ a municipal corporation has no authority to authorize obstructions in streets,⁵⁶ even though the municipality owns the fee of the street.⁵⁷ The authority of the municipal corporation to authorize an obstruction of the street will be strictly construed,⁵⁸ and it will not be assumed that the legislature intended to authorize the municipality to grant an encroachment amounting to a public nuisance.⁵⁹ However, it has been held that a municipal corporation may have power to legalize a nuisance when it is reasonably necessary to the performance of a public service.⁶⁰ Furthermore, municipal authorities may permit an encroachment on streets or sidewalks where it is not of such a nature as necessarily to prevent the rea-

Rule established

tion is that any private use of a street amounting to a permanent physical encroachment is a nuisance per se. He is able to cite eminent authority to this sweeping contention. Isolated statements by text-writers support it. Much judicial statement is also available. It is our impression, however, that in its full import it is generally obiter, due to the laying of an unnecessarily broad foundation of principle for the particular decision called for or rule laid down."—Dunn v. Town of Gallup, 29 P.2d 1053, 1054, 38 N.M. 197.

Effect of license or permit

(1) A permanent encroachment by private interests on public use of streets will not be permitted. However, where the encroachment is not permanent in character, as in the case, where it is under a permit or license which is revocable by the municipality, and is so slight as to be of no consequence, it may be permitted.—State ex rel. Requisites

Before it could be held that ordinance intended to legalize a permanent obstruction of sidewalk and a nuisance, it must appear that the ordinance either pointed out the place where objectionable structure was to be built or operated, or left to one operating it the power to make arbitrary selection.—Sitas v. City of San Angelo, supra.

Obstructions are not nuisances if duly permitted or licensed by the proper authorities⁶² of the state⁶³ or, where it possesses the power, of the municipality.⁶⁴ However, an unauthorized or invalid license⁶⁵ or one which has been duly revoked⁶⁶ will not prevent an obstruction from being a nuisance.

c. Particular Obstructions Held Lawful or Unlawful

Various street obstructions have been held to be lawful or unlawful depending on the circumstances of the case.

Street obstructions which, under the circumstances of the case, have been held nuisances or otherwise unlawful include a band stand;⁶⁷ bridges;⁶⁸ a ditch unbridged;⁶⁹ electric poles;⁷⁰ wires;⁷¹ or lamps⁷² erected or maintained without due authority; a fair;⁷³ a fence;⁷⁴ a fruit stand;⁷⁵ the act of horse racing;⁷⁶ a lumber pile;⁷⁷ a lunch wagon;⁷⁸ a railroad flagman's shanty;⁷⁹ a rope connecting traveling vehicles;⁸⁰ stands on the sidewalk;⁸¹ a stock market;⁸² taxicab telephones suspended above sidewalks;⁸³ tents, booths, and platforms;⁸⁴ a tool shed;⁸⁵ a wire stretched across the street so as to obstruct travel;⁸⁶ a guy wire and supporting pole;⁸⁷ and wagon or platform scales.⁸⁸

Particular street obstructions held not unlawful or a nuisance under the circumstances of particular cases include a flagstaff;⁸⁹ gasoline, in a small quantity and in a properly protected can, kept on

b. Removal and Regulation

§ 1747. Existence and Extent of Power

Ordinarily under constitutional, charter, or statutory provisions a municipal corporation has power to remove, regulate, and prohibit obstructions and encroachments on its streets. Such regulations should be reasonable.

Broad powers

A city council has broad general powers to maintain streets and sidewalks for public use, prevent encroachments or obstructions, and provide for removal of obstructions.—Laura Vincent Co. v. City of Selma, 111 P.2d 17, 43 Cal.App.2d 473.

Power to remove includes the power to prevent by reasonable regulations.—Portland v. Yates, 199 P. 184, 203 P. 319, 102 Or. 513.

Immunities

With respect to right of town to remove steps which extended over sidewalk and constituted a nuisance, the town was entitled to all rights and immunities appertaining to state, a branch of whose sovereignty over public highways has been duly bestowed by the state on it.—Miller v. Town of Seaford, 194 A. 37, 22 Del.Ch. 159.

Implied power to compel observance

The statute empowering city and town councils to prevent encumbering sidewalks with obstacles and material carries implied power to compel observance of such regulations.—Lazich v. City of Butte, 154 P.2d 260, 116 Mont. 386.

Inaction

Authority to cause structures encroaching on streets and sidewalks to be removed is not lost because of inaction of city for long period of time.—State v. City of Marianna, 39 S.W.2d 301, 183 Ark. 927.

Proprietary function

Statutes pertaining to the removal of obstructions of streets by municipalities constitute merely regulatory measures calling into exercise "private or proprietary functions," rather than "governmental functions."—Houston Lighting & Power Co. v. Fleming, Civ.App., 128 S.W.2d 487, reversed on other grounds Fleming v. Houston Lighting & Power Co., 138 S.W.2d 520, 135 Tex. 463, rehearing denied 143 S.W.2d 923, 135 Tex. 463, cert. denied Houston Lighting & Power Co. v. City of West University Place, 61 S.Ct. 836, 313 U.S. 560, 85 L.Ed. 1520.

Statutory power

Power of city board of public works to direct removal of structures in streets is derived from statute and not from any contract which city might make.—City of Indianapolis v. Link Realty Co., 179 N.E. 574, 94 Ind.App. 1.

3. Okl.—Palace Garage v. Oklahoma City, 268 P. 240, 131 Okl. 122.

Ordinance, ordering removal of encroachment from street, was legitimate exertion of police power.—City of Shreveport v. Kansas City, S. & G. Ry. Co., 120 So. 290, 167 La. 771, 62 A.L.R. 1512.

Mass picketing

City had right to take reasonable steps to break up mass picketing demonstration which blocked sidewalk.—People v. Garvey, 79 N.Y.S. 2d 456.

removal of obstructions from the sidewalks must be of general application.⁶ Under the power to regulate and prohibit, a municipal corporation may fix a penalty for violation of its regulations or directions respecting obstructions, as discussed infra § 1755.

Such regulations should not be arbitrary⁷ or discriminatory,⁸ but should be reasonable,⁹ and have a just relation to the object in view.¹⁰ Thus regulations prohibiting street obstructions are valid provided there is reasonable ground for the prohibition.¹¹ Furthermore, such regulations should be definite and certain,¹² and, in order to satisfy this requirement, regulations must either expressly or by clear implication classify the obstructions on which the regulations operate.¹³ Thus, a classification of street obstructions into temporary and permanent, and a provision that an ordinance shall operate only on temporary obstructions, is reasonable and valid.¹⁴ However, in the construction of such regulations the doctrine of noscitur a sociis may not be so applied as to render meaningless the general words used in an ordinance prohibiting the obstruction of a street.¹⁵

The limited extent of a street obstruction is immaterial as affecting the right to remove it,¹⁶ and the power to cause the removal of obstructions in streets is not confined to keeping them in safe condition for travel, but extends as fully to keeping them clean and attractive in appearance.¹⁷ Although a particular ordinance with respect to obstructions may not be enforced against a person acting under a grant of authority, the ordinance may be enforced as against one not within the grant.¹⁸

Municipal authorities are usually vested with a wide discretion as to regulation of obstructions,¹⁹ and, in the absence of a clear abuse of discretion, their action will not be reviewed by the courts.²⁰ The municipal power to prevent the obstruction of streets and alleys does not extend, however, to settling the title to lands or fixing the proper location of the street lines,²¹ except in so far as may be necessary in order to determine whether a structure does obstruct or encroach on a street.²²

Annexed territory. Since the power of the municipality over annexed territory is the same as over the old territory, in proceeding to remove an obstruction of the street, the existence of the obstruction prior to annexation does not affect the power.²³

Duty. The municipality is under a duty to remove obstructions and encroachments materially interfering with the public use of the streets,²⁴ and may be required to execute its power to remove obstructions encroaching on streets and sidewalks.²⁵

Relinquishment of power. The general rule that a municipal corporation cannot relinquish its power to control and regulate its streets, as discussed supra § 1688, applies to relinquishment of the power to remove obstructions and encroachments.²⁶

§ 1748. Exercise of Power in General

Where the method of exercising the power of removal of an obstruction or encroachment is prescribed by the statute conferring it, such method is exclusive and must be followed, but, if not specifically prescribed, the municipal corporation should pursue a method which is adequate and best adapted to effect the desired result.

Where the method of exercising the power of removal of an obstruction or encroachment is prescribed by the statute conferring it, such method is exclusive and must be followed;²⁷ but, if not specially prescribed, the municipal corporation should under its general powers pursue such course consistent with fundamental law as is adequate and best adapted, with respect to the rights of persons interested, to effect the desired result, and protect the rights of the public in the street.²⁸ All methods may be classified under two heads, ordinary and summary, the former being those invoking judicial power on due notice and hearing,²⁹ and the latter being by rapid and forcible means without hearing and judgment.³⁰

§ 1749. Prescription and Limitations

The right to maintain a street obstruction or encroachment amounting to a nuisance cannot be acquired by prescription.

The right to maintain a street obstruction or encroachment amounting to a nuisance cannot be acquired by prescription.³² Where a statute gives a municipal corporation the right to remove street encroachments and expressly provides that no lapse of time shall bar such right, the municipality will not be precluded from removing an encroachment

by the statute of limitations.³³ A street obstruction has been held a public nuisance within the meaning of a code provision to the effect that no lapse of time can legalize a public nuisance amounting to an actual obstruction of a public right.³⁴

The availability of general statutes of limitation to bar actions arising out of governmental functions by a municipality with respect to streets is discussed in Limitations of Actions § 17 b.

§ 1750. Summary Removal

- a. In general
- b. Particular obstructions or encroachments subject to summary removal
- c. Damages for, or expenses of, removal

a. In General

Ordinarily a municipal corporation may, in a proper case, summarily abate a substantial obstruction or encroachment on a public street. A private person may summarily remove an obstruction amounting to a nuisance where he is specially injured thereby.

Ordinarily a municipal corporation, under its general powers as public trustee and governmental agent, may, in a proper case, summarily abate a substantial obstruction or encroachment amounting to such on a public street, by removing it,³⁵ provided it is done with reasonable care and prudence.³⁶ The right is not affected by a power to impose a penalty for the violation of an ordinance prohibiting obstructions,³⁷ and the adoption by a municipal corporation of an ordinance providing a procedure for enforcing orders to remove obstructions from streets does not limit the exercise of a general power, given by statute, to do so in a summary way, and the procedure provided by the ordinance need not be followed.³⁸

A municipality cannot, by a mere declaration that a structure is a nuisance, subject it to removal by any person supposed to be aggrieved or by the municipality itself, where it is in fact not a nuisance;³⁹ and ordinarily the power summarily to remove an obstruction can be legally exercised only where the right so to do is clear and from the nature of the obstruction it need not first be determined by resort to the courts.⁴⁰ Summary removal is not proper where the legal existence of the street is in dispute,⁴¹ or where the question of encroachment involves the ascertainment of the true location of the line of the highway.⁴² Although municipal authorities are authorized by statute summarily to remove an obstruction, where its maintenance had originally been by permission, they do not have the right to remove it until such permission has been revoked.⁴³ Furthermore, it has been held that, where an encroachment on a street has been constructed under license of a general ordinance, the city cannot, under a special ordinance directed to the abutting owner alone, cause its removal.⁴⁴ Where rights in a street have been reserved in a grant of a highway, a municipality which has taken over the highway cannot remove alleged obstructions, maintained in the exercise of such rights, on the ground that they constitute a nuisance.⁴⁵ In some jurisdictions a resolution directing a removal of obstructions is insufficient, and the power is exercisable only by ordinance.⁴⁶ There is authority holding that a municipality cannot summarily remove an obstruction in an alley to which it has no title.⁴⁷

Some authorities draw a distinction between obstructions and encroachments,⁴⁸ holding that a municipality may summarily abate or remove the former⁴⁹ but not the latter.⁵⁰

The particular municipal officer who may remove or order the removal of an obstruction depends on charter or statutory provisions.⁵¹

By private person. A private person may summarily remove a street obstruction amounting to a nuisance⁵² where specially injured thereby,⁵³ but not before the street or alley is opened for public use.⁵⁴ If not specially injured, a private person may not remove the obstruction.⁵⁵

Direction of municipal officers. An individual cannot justify a trespass, in removing an obstruction in the street, under the claim that he did so under the direction of municipal officers where it does not appear that the direction was in the form of an ordinance as required by a statute providing for the removal of encroachments on streets.⁵⁶

Notice and hearing. Where the obstruction is one which is by the law expressly declared to be a nuisance or which is undisputedly so per se, notice is not necessary before summary removal.⁵⁷ Where the obstruction is not a nuisance per se, ordinarily notice to remove should be given prior to summary

Notice immaterial

Since notice is not necessary to remove nuisance per se, where city authorities notified property owner more than twenty days before city removed wall that it was in street, and requested him three times in writing to remove wall, city had right to remove wall summarily, although removal took place only one day after property owner received notice of resolution of city council directing city manager to remove wall.—Joseph v. City of Austin, Tex. Civ.App., 101 S.W.2d 881, error refused.

removal⁵⁸ and also an opportunity to be heard in defense of the right to maintain the alleged obstruction.⁵⁹

Review by courts. The existence of an obstruction or encroachment is generally a question for the proper municipal authorities, and their determination will not be reviewed by the courts except where an abuse of discretion is shown.⁶⁰

Injunction against removal. Equity will not ordinarily restrain the removal of an obstruction.⁶¹

b. Particular Obstructions or Encroachments Subject to Summary Removal

Various obstructions or encroachments have been held subject to summary removal by a municipal corporation.

A municipal corporation may summarily remove a private business stand,⁶² houseboat,⁶³ doorsteps,⁶⁴ a wall,⁶⁵ or trees, as discussed supra § 1693, which are unlawfully and unreasonably obstructing the streets.

Awnings. An awning may be summarily removed where it is so maintained as to endanger the traveling public,⁶⁶ or where it is erected without proper authority,⁶⁷ and an ordinance requiring removal of stationary awnings is within the general powers of a municipality over its streets.⁶⁸ However power to regulate its streets does not authorize a municipality summarily to remove an awning which does not interfere with public travel.⁶⁹

Buildings. A building will not ordinarily be subject to summary removal because of a slight encroachment on the street,⁷⁰ but may be removed where the encroachment or obstruction is substantial,⁷¹ especially where defendant was warned of encroachment during construction,⁷² or where it is being moved along the street without proper authority.⁷³

Fences. Ordinarily a municipality may summarily remove fences which are constructed so as to inclose part of the street,⁷⁴ and may remove a

Extent of encroachment

If building encroaches on street, court at instance of city should require abatement, unless extent of encroachment is so small that court can say as matter of law that determination of governing body of city is arbitrary and unreasonable.—City of Emporia v. Absence of title in plaintiff

Allegations of petition that strip of land between two lots owned by plaintiff had never been public street, had always been held by owners of plaintiff's property, that city asserted no claim thereto, and that resolution of aldermen to that effect was ratification of plaintiff's title, were insufficient to show title of plaintiff which would entitle him to enjoin city from requiring removal of obstructions from strip which it proposed to open as a street.—Mayor and Council of City of For-

Burden of proof

In action to enjoin city officials from removing concrete wall and concrete wings attached thereto from portion of street, plaintiff had burden of proving that such structures were placed in street because boundaries thereof were unknown, or through mistake regarding location of property line, or that representations by city officials induced such location, construction, or maintenance of the structures.—Steele v. fence built along the side of a street line where it is of a character rendering it a nuisance,⁷⁵ although there is authority holding that a fence slightly encroaching on the street without seriously obstructing public travel may not be summarily removed.⁷⁶

c. Damages for, or Expenses of, Removal

The owner of property removed from a street as an obstruction or encroachment is not entitled to compensation if it was properly removed under the police power. The lawful expenses incurred by a municipal corporation removing obstructions is chargeable to the obstructor or encroacher.

The owner of property removed from a street as an obstruction or encroachment is not entitled to recover compensation if it was properly removed under the police power.⁷⁷ However, if a municipality assumes to exercise the summary power of removal, it does so at its own risk and is liable in damages if the removal was unauthorized.⁷⁸ The right summarily to remove a street obstruction constituting a nuisance does not include the right unnecessarily to injure it,⁷⁹ and a municipality⁸⁰ or an individual⁸¹ is liable in damages for infliction of wanton or unnecessary injury in removing a street obstruction.

Exemplary damages may be imposed for wanton injury,⁸² and evidence of good faith may be considered on the question of punitive damages.⁸³

Expense of removal. An adjoining owner may be compelled to remove an obstruction within highway limits at his own expense, if it becomes an obstruction to public travel,⁸⁴ and the lawful expenses incurred by a municipality in removing obstructions is chargeable to the obstructor or encroacher.⁸⁵

§ 1751. Removal by Judicial Proceedings

Municipal corporations may, at their election, resort to the courts to abate a street obstruction or encroachment constituting a public nuisance.

Although municipal corporations are authorized to declare by general ordinance what constitutes a nuisance and to prevent, abate, or remove them, they may also at their election resort to the courts to abate a street obstruction or encroachment constituting a public nuisance.⁸⁶

§ 1752. — Ejectment

Ordinarily a municipal corporation may maintain ejectment to recover possession of a street from an obstructor. The question whether ownership of the fee of the street is necessary in order to maintain this action is the subject of conflicting authority.

Instructions

ages for tearing down wire fence which plaintiff erected to inclose tract of land which town claimed was part of street, instruction that, if such land was dedicated by plaintiff's predecessor as public street, or even if there was no form of dedication, but owner caused land to be platted and sold off property by blocks and lots in recognition of plat, plaintiff could not recover unless plaintiff had right to hold land by adverse possession was proper.—Parker v. Batson, 82 S.W.2d 20, 190 Ark. 880.

Ordinarily a municipal corporation may maintain ejectment to recover possession of a street from an obstructor,⁸⁷ without having previously passed an ordinance relating to the removal of the obstructions therein.⁸⁸ However, the general rule is not applicable to the case of a turnpike in control of a private corporation, even though the municipality may have, over the turnpike, certain prescribed powers, which, if possessed over an ordinary highway, would create by implication a right to maintain that action.⁸⁹

Some authorities hold that the municipality may maintain ejectment irrespective of whether it owns the fee of the street,⁹⁰ while other authority is to the contrary.⁹¹

The burden is on plaintiff of introducing evidence sufficient to establish that defendant's possession encroaches on a street, the title of which is said to be in the state.⁹²

Defenses. Where the municipal corporation had no power to grant a permit for the private use of a street, action of municipal authorities in issuing purported permit does not estop the city from seeking removal in ejectment,⁹³ and unauthorized permit constituted no defense to city's action in ejectment.⁹⁴ The general statute of limitation does not apply to an action by the municipality for the recovery of the title or possession of a public way.⁹⁵

§ 1753. — Proceedings for Abatement or Injunction

a. In general

b. Persons entitled to sue

c. Defenses

d. Proceedings and relief

a. In General

An obstruction of a street constituting a public nuisance may be abated and enjoined by action, but it must clearly appear to be a nuisance.

An obstruction of a street constituting a public nuisance may be abated and enjoined by action,⁹⁶ but it must clearly appear to be a nuisance.⁹⁷ Although a bill seeks damages for a period barred by the statute of limitations, it is nevertheless maintainable to abate a continuing street nuisance.⁹⁸ Where title to the land is in dispute, it must be determined at law before a court of equity will interfere.⁹⁹ Furthermore, it has been held that, if the municipal right is doubtful, a court of equity will give consideration to the inconvenience and damage that would result to defendant, as well as to the benefits that will accrue to the municipality in enjoining defendant from closing an alleged street.¹ Thus, where a street has for a long time been abandoned, and it does not appear that the public will suffer any inconvenience because of such abandonment, remedy by injunction will not be granted.²

The mere existence of a legal remedy will not preclude equitable relief to a municipality,³ although it has been held that relief will not be awarded a municipality where there is an adequate remedy at law.⁴ In an action by a private person relief will not ordinarily be awarded where there is an adequate remedy at law,⁵ but in some cases equity will relieve without inquiring whether the injury will be irreparable,⁶ or whether the legal remedy is inadequate.⁷ Insolvency of defendant is not necessary to

Preliminary or temporary injunction. The granting or refusal of a temporary or preliminary injunction restraining the obstruction or encroachment of a street is a matter of discretion with the court,⁹ and does not constitute an adjudication of the controversy.¹⁰ It may be granted in a proper case,¹¹ although the evidence is conflicting as to whether plaintiff will sustain special damages;¹² but it should be denied where the granting thereof would work greater hardship to defendant than its refusal would to plaintiff.¹³ Generally, it will be granted only where there is a clear legal right,¹⁴ and a pressing necessity,¹⁵ to prevent an irreparable injury,¹⁶ and this is especially true as to a mandatory interlocutory injunction.¹⁷ It has been held that a temporary injunction will not be granted if the ultimate relief sought is doubtful of attainment,¹⁸ or where an immediate trial is possible.¹⁹

- (2) Private person

(1) Municipal Corporation

A municipal corporation may sue to restrain the continuance of a street obstruction.

A municipal corporation may sue to restrain the continuance of an obstruction of a street,²⁰ notwithstanding it has power summarily to remove the obstruction,²¹ or to impose a penalty for violation of ordinances prohibiting encroachment,²² although it has no title to the street,²³ or although a statute gives another agency power to sue for injunction or abatement of street obstructions.²⁴ Suit may be brought by it even before the acceptance in the statutory form of a street whose dedication has been tendered to the public,²⁵ and without first giving the obstructor a chance to remove the obstruction.²⁶ Such proceedings are ordinarily authorized by resolution of the municipal legislative body.²⁷

An ordinance declaring a particular obstruction to be a nuisance, and for its prevention or removal, may be required where such a condition is imposed by the charter of the municipality.²⁸

Where the obstruction constitutes a public nuisance, and no individual rights are specially injured, the remedy has been held to be through public authorities only,²⁹ and the action can be prosecuted only by the municipality.³⁰

(2) Private Person

An individual may maintain an action to enjoin or abate a street obstruction or encroachment constituting a nuisance where he has sustained or will sustain special injury, if the injury is irreparable and the remedy at law inadequate.

An individual may maintain an action to enjoin or abate a street obstruction or encroachment constituting a nuisance where he has sustained or will sustain special injury,³¹ as where the obstruction cuts off the view from plaintiff's premises,³² but not where no special injury exists.³³ In order to enjoin or abate a street obstruction, a private person must show injury not only greater in degree, but also different in kind, from that suffered by the general public,³⁴ particular to plaintiff,³⁵ and distinct from that suffered by citizens generally.³⁶ If complainant is the real obstructor, he has no standing to invoke equitable aid in his behalf.³⁷

A municipal official, not charged with the duty of suing for the municipality, cannot enjoin a street obstruction without showing the same special injury essential to any other private person's right of action.³⁸

Suit by taxpayer. Ordinarily a taxpayer cannot sue to enjoin or abate a street obstruction causing him no special private injury,³⁹ although there is authority holding that he may do so on refusal of the municipality to act.⁴⁰

Existence of other remedy. The injury must be irreparable,⁴¹ and the remedy at law inadequate;⁴² but the right to sue for an injunction is not necessarily precluded by the fact that there has been a recovery at law.⁴³ An individual who suffers special injury from an obstruction is not precluded from maintaining an action for its abatement by

Where the legislative power to control encroachments into or over public highways has been delegated to the city, the use of a sidewalk for the purpose of selling newspapers may not, in the absence of action on the subject by city council, be enjoined in equity by a citizen.—

the fact that an indictment would lie to prevent the encroachment, and that on conviction the court might order a removal,⁴⁴ and a person sustaining a peculiar injury may enjoin such nuisance without first applying to the city authorities for relief.⁴⁵

Contemplated obstruction. An admittedly intended street obstruction which will specially injure a private person may be enjoined at his suit prior to construction.⁴⁶

Breach of private contract. Where the act of defendant in making use of a street constitutes a breach of a private contract between plaintiff and defendant, an action for an injunction may be maintained,⁴⁷ subject to the rules applicable to the protection of contract rights by injunctions generally, as discussed in Injunctions §§ 77-95.

c. Defenses

The facts that similar obstructions have been permitted or that others are violating the regulations do not constitute a defense to proceedings to remove a street obstruction. Ordinarily laches will not constitute a defense to an action by the municipality but it may be a defense to an action by an individual.

It is no defense in proceedings relative to removal of street obstructions that permission was given by the abutting owner;⁴⁸ that similar obstructions have been permitted to remain in the streets for a considerable time;⁴⁹ that other persons are violating the regulations,⁵⁰ or have been permitted so to encroach.⁵¹ An unauthorized agreement between the municipality and the obstructor is no defense.⁵² Where the title to the property is in a married woman, her husband is not liable, although he acted as the agent of his wife.⁵³

Laches and estoppel. Mere lapse of time, without any other element of estoppel, will not bar the right of a municipality to remove a street obstruction,⁵⁴ and past failure to enforce ordinances against the obstruction of sidewalks does not estop a municipal corporation from subsequently removing all obstructions therefrom.⁵⁵ However, although there is authority to the contrary,⁵⁶ it has been held that long-continued municipal acquiescence in the maintenance of street obstructions of a permanent nature will estop the municipality from removing them,⁵⁷ but mere forbearance to remove an obstruction of a street does not constitute acquiescence working an estoppel against the municipality,⁵⁸ and, where defendant has not been misled to his injury, there can be no estoppel.⁵⁹ A municipality is not estopped to remove an unlawful obstruction by having made a proposition to permit its use for a money consideration where such proposition is not accepted,⁶⁰ but the fact that such offer was made tends to show that the municipality did not regard the structure as an obstruction of the street or as a menace to public health, and a nuisance.⁶¹

An action by an individual may be barred by laches,⁶² or by estoppel,⁶³ but, where a statute provides that no lapse of time can legalize a public nuisance amounting to an actual obstruction of public rights, the doctrine that mere lapse of time will not prevent suit, which is applicable to municipal plaintiffs, applies also to individual plaintiffs.⁶⁴ A party suing as executor is not estopped to have obstructions on certain streets removed by the fact that his testator had closed a part of a street not involved in the suit.⁶⁵

d. Proceedings and Relief

Subject to statutory variations, the general rules of equity are applicable to proceedings for abatement, or to restrain the maintenance, of a street obstruction.

Subject to statutory variations, the general rules of equity are applicable to proceedings for abatement, or to restrain the maintenance, of a street obstruction.⁶⁶

Process. Under a statute providing for service by publication in actions which relate to, or the subject matter of which is, real or personal property within the state, a nonresident owner of abutting property on which a building has been erected encroaching on a street may be served by publication in a proceeding for a mandatory injunction to compel the removal of the encroachment.⁶⁷

Parties. General rules apply in determining who are necessary and proper parties in a proceeding to enjoin or abate a street obstruction.⁶⁸ Where, in a suit to enjoin a street obstruction, the public right is involved, the public must be a party to the suit.⁶⁹

in its name as plaintiff⁷⁰ or in the name of particular officers,⁷¹ in accordance with charter and statutory provisions. Although it is provided by statute that, if the street obstruction is merely a public nuisance and no private individual suffers special damages, the proceedings to abate should be in the name of the city acting on the motion of the corporate body itself, or in the name of the city on the application of some citizen, where the city authorities are disqualified from acting as triers of the question whether such obstruction is a nuisance, the court has jurisdiction of a suit brought in the name of the solicitor general at the instance, and on the information, of a citizen.⁷²

An action may be brought in the name of the people of the state⁷³ or an attorney general may sue in the name of the state,⁷⁴ and the right is not affected by a statute⁷⁵ or an ordinance⁷⁶ imposing a fine on one obstructing a public road. However, it has been held that, where there is no allegation of demand on, or refusal of, the city officials to act in the matter, courts of equity will hesitate to enjoin encroachments on public highways in a proceeding by the attorney general.⁷⁷

In an action to enjoin an obstruction or encroachment in a street, the person in possession and control of the obstruction or encroachment is a necessary and proper party.⁷⁸ An abutting lot owner and the municipality are proper defendants in a suit to set aside an ordinance vacating part of a street and to require the removal of a building thereon.⁷⁹ In an action by a municipality to compel by manda-

Waiver of right to sue

Where citizen, after receiving assurances that council considered itself qualified to determine whether encroachment in street by a corporation was a nuisance, invoked the statutory procedure for abatement by city authorities, he thus waived disqualification of the city authorities resulting from their having made lease to the corporation, and renounced his right to continue suit to enjoin the encroachment as a public nuisance, previously brought by him in name of solicitor general on ground of disqualification of city authorities; and, hence, he could not resume such suit after adverse decision by city authorities, irrespective of any declaration or intimation of such intention in his statutory demand on city authorities. After adverse decision by city authorities in statutory proceeding for abatement of nuisance, complaining citizen's remedy is certiorari to be maintained in the name of the city on citizen's application and at his instance.—*Calhoun ex rel. Grantors

In suit to enjoin the closing of an alley on ground that public easement by prescription had been acquired, defendants' grantors, who conveyed property to defendants by warranty deed, would have been proper parties, but were not necessary parties.—Kirby v. City of Harrison, 148 S.W.2d 666, 202 Ark. 1.

tory injunction the removal from the sidewalk of as much of a building as encroaches thereon, the owner of the property, as well as the lessee who erected the building, is a necessary party,⁸⁰ and the lessee is a proper party and the real party in interest where he persists in encroaching after notification that the structure being erected encroaches on the sidewalk, especially where the lease provides that the lessee is responsible for any violation of law.⁸¹ Where a city by ordinance merely abandons the claim to land as a public street and permits owners of an adjacent lot to close it, the city is not a necessary, even though it may be a proper, party defendant in a suit to enjoin the obstruction of the street;⁸² and, where an individual erects an obstruction in a street and the only offense of the municipality is its neglect of duty to make him vacate, it is not a necessary party to an action by the prosecuting attorney of the county to abate the nuisance.⁸³

Where the action is brought by the municipality, the state need not be joined as a party.⁸⁴ Property owners on one street cannot join the property owners on another street to enjoin a use of the street by a public service corporation,⁸⁵ but any property holders injuriously affected may be joined as plaintiffs.⁸⁶ Several persons who are encroaching on a public street, but who are in no way connected with, or dependent on, each other in such action need not be joined as defendants in a suit to remove an obstruction maintained by one of them.⁸⁷

Complaint. In accordance with the ordinary rules of equity pleading the complaint must set forth every fact clearly necessary to obtain the relief sought.⁸⁸ Thus, the complaint must set forth facts showing an obstruction,⁸⁹ and the nature of the place obstructed.⁹⁰ A complaint is not defective on the ground that it combines inconsistent causes of action because it seeks at the same time to abate a nuisance and to recover real property in ejectment,⁹¹ or because it incidentally requests a money judgment.⁹² The prayer for relief may be general or special.⁹³

In a suit by the municipality to abate an obstruction, damages need not be alleged,⁹⁴ and an allegation that plaintiff is a municipal corporation in a certain county is sufficient without alleging how or when it was created.⁹⁵ In a suit by a private person the bill or complaint must allege facts showing that plaintiff's injury is different in kind from that suffered by the general public.⁹⁶

Plea or answer. Defendant in his answer must meet the allegations of the complaint.⁹⁷ In an action by the municipality to compel the removal of a fence inclosing an alley, which the municipality claimed had been rededicated after ten years' title against the municipality had been perfected by limitation, defendant may show that there was no new dedication of the alley, under a plea of not guilty.⁹⁸

Motion to dismiss. In some jurisdictions the sufficiency of the bill of complaint to enjoin the obstruction of a street may be tested by a motion to dismiss,⁹⁹ and such a motion is the equivalent of a demurrer and is subject to the same rules,¹ such as the admission of the truth of all material and relevant facts which are well pleaded.²

Evidence. Under rules applicable to evidence in civil actions generally, the burden is on complainant to establish the facts essential to his cause of action,³ such as the character of the encroachment as a nuisance⁴ and the location of street lines where in dispute.⁵ General rules also apply as to the admissibility and weight and sufficiency of the evidence.⁶

Questions for jury. In cases wherein a jury trial is had, the existence of an obstruction is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury.⁷

Judgment or decree. The relief granted must be in proportion to the nature or extent of the injury done or likely to be sustained and not in excess thereof, and must be consistent with the theory of the bill as established by the proofs.⁸ An abatement of the obstruction cannot be decreed where the pleadings and verdict are indefinite as to its location.⁹

Costs. In a proper case, it has been held, a complainant municipality may be allowed reasonable counsel fees as costs.¹⁰ Costs may be denied a successful complainant where at the time of commencement of the action the situation is such that it is well for both parties that the questions involved should be settled by judicial determination rather than by a resort to summary proceedings.¹¹

c. Damages, Penalties, and Criminal Responsibility

§ 1754. Actions for Damages

A municipal corporation has a cause of action for damages against a person causing an unauthorized obstruction of a street, and a private person suffering special injury through such an obstruction has a cause of action for damages against the obstructor.

An unauthorized obstruction in a street gives a cause of action for damages to a municipal corporation against the obstructor.¹² A county cannot sue for the obstruction of a city street over which the city is vested with authority and control.¹³

A private person suffering special injury through an unauthorized street obstruction has a cause of action against the obstructor for damages.¹⁴ However, there is authority holding that one under a contractual obligation to repair streets cannot recover against an obstructor whose obstructions increase the cost of street repair.¹⁵ An action for damages cannot be maintained by one seeking to use the street for an unreasonable purpose or in such a manner as to constitute a nuisance,¹⁶ or suffering no special injury different from that of the general public.¹⁷

The right to sue is not barred by the abatement of the nuisance,¹⁸ and a subsequent lease of the structure constituting the nuisance complained of or its occupation by others is no defense,¹⁹ especially where such lease is merely colorable.²⁰

Existence of public street. As in other proceedings involving obstructions and encroachments, it must appear that the street is an existing public street,²¹ and where it appears that the strip of land involved was never accepted or worked by public authorities as a street or alley there can be no recovery as a matter of law.²²

Persons liable. All persons are liable who cause or maintain a street obstruction constituting a nuisance,²³ and an action may be brought against the municipality for damages caused by an unlawful street obstruction for which it is responsible.²⁴

Pleadings. The complaint should state facts sufficient to show the unlawful character of the obstruction²⁵ and the lawful character of the street use by plaintiff.²⁶ The complaint, in order to state a cause of action, need not negative the existence of facts which defendant may assert in justification of the obstruction.²⁷

Questions for jury. In a suit for damage to conduits of a lighting and heating company, running through a public alley, it is a question for the jury whether defendant had notice of the presence of such conduits.²⁸

Damages recoverable. The damages recoverable by a private person are all damages directly resulting from the unlawful obstruction, and not suffered in common by the public generally.²⁹ Punitive damages may be awarded where the obstructor willfully refuses to abate the nuisance.³⁰

Ordinarily municipal corporations have the power to prescribe the penalty for the violation of ordinances relating to street obstructions.

Where a valid statute or ordinance so provides, a penalty may be exacted for unlawfully obstructing a street.³¹ Although municipal power to impose penalties for encroachments and obstructions will not exist through avoidable implication,³² municipal corporations, in connection with their general delegated power to control streets and prohibit obstructions therein, ordinarily have power to prescribe punishment by fine or imprisonment for the violation of ordinances relating to obstructions.³³ An ordinance which is repugnant to the laws of the state is invalid.³⁴ A licensee is not liable for such penalties where the work is being done by an independent contractor³⁵ or where he has been granted a temporary private use of a street, although it amounts to a temporary obstruction, at least until a demand by the municipality to relinquish the use.³⁶ Furthermore, a municipal servant acting under charter power is not liable to the statutory penalty for obstructing streets.³⁷ Statutes and ordinances imposing a penalty afford no right of action to a private individual where the act does not amount to a nuisance.³⁸

Statutes and ordinances imposing penalties for street obstructions are to be strictly construed,³⁹ although ordinances subjecting "any person" to a penalty are held to include a corporation.⁴⁰ A statute imposing a penalty for obstructing a sidewalk with a vehicle applies to a hand truck.⁴¹ An ordinance imposing a penalty on any person who shall spread an awning over a sidewalk has been held not to apply to one who continues to maintain an awning erected prior to the passage of the ordinance.⁴² A statute which declares a penalty as to one who obstructs a public road and an additional forfeiture for every day he suffers the obstruction to remain after notice from the overseer has been held not to apply to city streets where the overseer is an officer whose duties are peculiar to country roads.⁴³ However, it has been held that, although a village has no overseer of highways, a statute imposing a penalty for obstructing highways and providing that the overseer of the proper district shall cause such obstruction to be removed applies to a village wherein another officer performs the functions of an overseer.⁴⁴

Defenses. A municipal corporation is not estopped to bring an action for violation of an ordinance relative to the obstruction of streets by the fact that a committee of the municipal council had agreed that defendant should have the use of the obstructed street for its business.⁴⁵ In like manner the municipality cannot be estopped to recover a penalty for the obstruction of a street crossing by reason of the fact that it allowed defendant to expend money on the assumption that the street was vacated where the record of the council shows that the vacating ordinance was not passed as required by law.⁴⁶

b. Proceedings

As a general rule, actions to recover penalties for the obstruction of a street are civil, and not criminal, proceedings.

As a general rule, actions to recover penalties for the obstruction of a street are civil, and not criminal, proceedings.⁴⁷ Where a statute provides that a claim to the penalty shall be cognizable by the mayor or other officer of the city, such officer must necessarily inquire into the fact whether the place where the obstruction is put is a public street, and he has jurisdiction to try the fact whether a claim set up by defendant to the freehold is bona fide made,⁴⁸ but in such a case, if the claim is bona fide made, the jurisdiction of the officer is ousted, and he cannot inquire into the validity of the claim and he has no power in such case to proceed to a summary conviction.⁴⁹

a. In General

Any street encroachment or obstruction amounting to a nuisance is indictable at common law and in many jurisdictions by express statute. Statutes and ordinances defining and punishing offenses of this character are to be strictly construed, and in order to impose liability the prescribed elements of the offense must concur.

Any street encroachment or obstruction amounting to a nuisance is indictable at common law⁵⁷ and in many jurisdictions by express statute.⁵⁸ In order to make an obstruction an indictable offense at common law, it must injuriously affect some public right, that is, some right in which the public, in its aggregate capacity, has a common interest, as distinguished from a mere individual or private right.⁵⁹ Under statutes or ordinances defining and punishing offenses of this character the prescribed elements of the offense must concur in order to impose liability.⁶⁰

Statutes or ordinances of the character under consideration are to be strictly construed.⁶¹ Under a statute punishing acts or omissions rendering a street dangerous for passage, a conviction cannot be had for an act which merely tends with reasonable certainty to set in motion other causes which would render the street dangerous.⁶² An ordinance is not void for uncertainty because it gives the mayor the discretion to impose a punishment of either fine or imprisonment.⁶³ A statute penalizing the obstruction of public roads and highways has been held to apply to city streets,⁶⁴ although a similar statute was held inapplicable to city streets because of statutory provisions placing all roads and streets within a municipality in the absolute control of the municipality.⁶⁵

An indictment may lie, although the street obstructed has not been entirely opened and made fit for all uses.⁶⁶ However, an obstruction has been held not to be an indictable offense where the street has never been opened or is not used by the public,⁶⁷ although there is also authority to the contrary.⁶⁸

Persons liable. Where an officer, in executing a writ of restitution, places on the sidewalk goods removed from the premises, allowing them to remain there is the offense of the owner of the goods, and the officer is not guilty of a violation of an ordinance prohibiting the placing or leaving of any obstruction on the street.⁶⁹

Compelling prosecution. A prosecution for violation of an ordinance may not be compelled by private individuals for the purpose of having a disputed civil right determined at the cost of the municipality.⁷⁰

Defenses. It is no defense that others against whom prosecutions have not been brought are violating the same statute or ordinance,⁷¹ that part of the structure or thing obstructing the street was not within the street,⁷² that the act was committed on the advice of third persons,⁷³ or that the municipality had refused to fulfill another agreement.⁷⁴ Furthermore, it is no defense that authority to encroach on a street was granted by an invalid ordinance.⁷⁵ It is no defense to attack the validity of a statute other than the one under which the prosecution is brought.⁷⁶

b. Prosecution and Punishment

An indictment or complaint charging the obstruction of a street must allege the facts showing the commission of the offense. General rules of criminal procedure as to evidence and to issues, proof, and variance are applicable.

Obstructions which are misdemeanors are punishable, under indictment, information, or complaint, brought in the name of the state.⁷⁷ Questions of boundary or servitude are not involved so as to deprive inferior courts of jurisdiction.⁷⁸

the statute or ordinance on which the prosecution is based.⁷⁹ Since a street is a public highway, it is unnecessary, when using the word "street," to add the words "public highway."⁸⁰ Ordinarily it need not be alleged that the town in which the street lies is an incorporated town,⁸¹ but, where the statute prohibits the willful obstruction of a street in an incorporated town, such an allegation is required.⁸² It has also been held that the complaint must show on its face that the offense was committed prior to the filing of the complaint.⁸³

Issues, proof, and variance. On the trial the proof must accord with the charges of the indictment, information, or complaint, and the issues in the case,⁸⁴ and a material variance between the allegations and the proof adduced in support thereof is fatal.⁸⁵ However, a failure to prove the allegation to the extent charged does not necessarily result in a fatal variance,⁸⁶ as where it is not a question of the identity of the obstruction, but only to the extent of the obstruction.⁸⁷

Evidence. The burden of proof is on the prosecution to show that the way obstructed was a public street or alley,⁸⁸ and in a prosecution for violating an ordinance prohibiting wires and poles in streets and alleys defendant has the burden of showing that his employer had a franchise so to use the streets, if that is the fact.⁸⁹ The general rules of criminal procedure as to admissibility and sufficiency of evidence apply in prosecutions for the obstruction of a street,⁹⁰ including the necessity of establishing guilt of accused beyond a reasonable doubt.⁹¹

Evidence that the act complained of as an obstruction was done under the advice of the officials of a municipality is admissible on the question of willfulness,⁹² and the fact that a complaint refers to an obstruction of the street does not make inadmissible evidence that water accumulated and obstructed the sidewalk, where the complaint also charges the obstruction of a sidewalk.⁹³ However, accused cannot show that no employee of any other company had been arrested for a violation of a particular ordinance for the purpose of showing that the ordinance was directed against his employer alone,⁹⁴ and evidence that accused in asking the authorities for a privilege referred to the land alleged to have been obstructed as a street is inadmissible against him where the privilege asked for was refused.⁹⁵ The information cannot be sustained on inference, but only on sufficient legal proof.⁹⁶

Questions of fact. With the exception of a nuisance per se, the existence or nonexistence of which is a question of law,⁹⁷ as a general rule whether or not the particular structure erected or maintained is an obstruction is a question of fact for the court or jury trying the cause.⁹⁸ It is a question for the jury whether accused was a principal to the crime within the statutory definition thereof.⁹⁹

Findings. The findings must include every essential ingredient of the offense.¹

Costs. Where the structure is shown to be on the private property of accused, no costs are taxable against him.²

Review. Under general rules the findings of the trial court as to the facts will not be reviewed where there is evidence on which they may be supported.³

Abatement on conviction. As a general rule, on conviction for obstructing a street, an abatement of the obstruction may be required as part of the judgment.⁴ However, it has been held that whether or not there shall be an abatement rests in the discretion of the court⁵ and that the court is not required to order an abatement if for any reason it cannot properly or lawfully be carried into effect.⁶

§ 1757. Right and Mode of Use in General

Streets of a municipal corporation are established as passageways for pedestrian and vehicular traffic.

Streets are established to serve as passageways for pedestrian and vehicular traffic,⁷ and should be administered primarily for such purpose.⁸ Neither an individual nor a corporation has any natural or inherent right to use the streets except for traf-

ited to any particular method, but includes the right to travel by any ordinary method of locomotion⁸² or even by an extraordinary method if it is not such as is likely to prevent a reasonably safe use of the streets by others;⁸³ it applies to the use of new classes of vehicles as they come into use, as well as to those existing when the street was opened,⁸⁴ except any new use which tends to destroy the street as a means of travel common to all.⁸⁵

Limitations on right. The right to use the streets for travel and passage is not absolute and unrestricted, but is relative,⁸⁶ and must be exercised in subordination to the general comfort and convenience and be consonant with peace and good order.⁸⁷ Thus the right of a person to use a street for travel or transportation must be exercised with due regard to the safety and use of others,⁸⁸ and in a mode consistent with the equal rights of others to use the streets,⁸⁹ and must give way at all times to the safety of the public.⁴⁰ It is subject to temporary interruption or inconvenience occasioned by the use of the street by others for lawful purposes,⁴¹ such as by the use of adjoining property for business purposes;⁴² and is also subject to reasonable restrictions and limitations prescribed by the state or municipality,⁴³ or by the law of the road, discussed infra § 1779.

Extent of use. Subject to the limitations set forth above, the right of the public to pass over streets extends over every part thereof, from side to side and end to end;⁴⁴ it extends to any portion of the street not in actual use by some other traveler.⁴⁵

45. Tex.—J. M. Radford Grocery Co. v. City of Abilene, Civ.App., 20 S.W.2d 255, affirmed, Com.App., 34 S.W.2d 830.

a. In General

As a general rule pedestrians may use any part of the streets for purposes of travel.

In the absence of any governmental regulation restricting his rights in this respect, discussed infra subdivision b of this section, a pedestrian has the right to use any part of a street for the purpose of travel, consistent with the other legal uses to which it is devoted,⁴⁶ and subject to the condition that it does not unreasonably abridge or interfere with the exercise of a similar right in others;⁴⁷ this rule applies in a district which is largely, if not entirely, a manufacturing one.⁴⁸ In the absence of such restrictions a pedestrian may cross a street diagonally,⁴⁹ and is not restricted to regular crossing places, but may cross at any other place,⁵⁰ especially where the street crossing is obstructed or in a dangerous condition.⁵¹

In the absence of a sidewalk the rights of pedestrians on the paved roadway are equal to those of vehicles.⁵²

b. Regulations and Restrictions

The right of pedestrians to use the streets for travel is subject to reasonable regulation under the police power.

A regulation is valid as being within the police power of a municipality, which imposes reasonable restrictions on pedestrians in their use of the streets,⁵³ as where, in densely populated cities, or in congested parts thereof, it prohibits pedestrians from crossing streets except at regular crossing places,⁵⁴ and provides that they shall cross only at right angles, and not diagonally.⁵⁵ A regulation giving pedestrians the right of way over vehicular traffic at certain crossings has been upheld as valid, although it changes the common-law rule giving pedestrians and vehicles equal rights.⁵⁶ However, where the regulation of pedestrian traffic is intended to be fully occupied by state legislation on the subject, which in part provides that pedestrians crossing at a point other than the crosswalk shall give the right of way to vehicles, an ordinance prohibiting pedestrians from crossing at places other than crosswalks is invalid.⁵⁷

An ordinance giving vehicles the right of way between intersections does not prohibit pedestrians from using the street between such points;⁵⁸ and an ordinance which prohibits the crossing of streets by pedestrians at other than designated crossings, and provides that the director of public service shall designate such crossings by mark, is inoperative until such designation has been made by the authorized official.⁵⁹ An ordinance making the right of pedestrians between intersections inferior to that of vehicles,⁶⁰ or giving the pedestrians the right of way at street crossings and vehicles the right of way at other points in the street,⁶¹ does not make it unlawful for a pedestrian to cross the street between intersections. An ordinance requiring pedestrians to cross street intersections in congested districts at the same time as vehicles going in the same direction, and not to use the street unnecessarily, does not prohibit pedestrians from crossing elsewhere than at street intersections.⁶² An ordinance

§ 1760. — By Common Carriers

A common carrier for hire has no inherent or vested right to use the streets.

The right to operate vehicles on the streets of a municipality as a common carrier for hire is not an inherent or vested right,⁶⁴ but is in the nature of a special right or privilege which may be exercised only by license or permission of the state,⁶⁵ or of the municipality, under its delegated powers,⁶⁶ and an individual conducting such a business without such permission may be deprived of such right without compensation, as long as his right to pass over streets and do anything incident to their use for purposes of travel is not interfered with.⁶⁷

As a mere privilege, the use of streets by common carriers is subject to reasonable control and regulation,⁶⁸ and, since such a right or privilege is special, unusual, and extraordinary, the power to regulate and restrict such use of the streets is broader than in respect of their use by the general public.⁶⁹ The state or municipality, within the limits of its delegated powers, may determine to what extent or on what streets such an extraordinary use as encroaches on the paramount rights of the public at large will be permitted,⁷⁰ and it may discriminate against those making such use of the streets,⁷¹ and may either grant or withhold the right or privilege of operating vehicles for such a purpose,⁷² and may grant it to some and refuse it to others,⁷³

Ordinary use distinguished

"The right of a citizen to travel upon the highway and transport his property thereon, in the ordinary course of life and business, differs radically and obviously from that of one who makes the highway his place of business and uses it for private gain, in the running of a stage coach or omnibus. The former is the usual and ordinary right of a citizen, a common right, a right common to all, while the latter is special, unusual and extraordinary. As to the former, the extent of legislative power is that of regulation; but, as to the latter, its power is broader. The right may be wholly denied, or it may be permitted to some and denied to others, because of its extraordinary nature. This distinction, elementary and fundamental in character, is recognized by all the authorities."

without violating the constitution,⁷⁴ except that a license or permission cannot be granted to some and refused to others who are willing to comply with the terms and conditions of the regulation providing for such license or permission.⁷⁵ However, the power of a municipality to regulate its streets does not authorize it to prohibit the use of all of its streets by carriers for hire;⁷⁶ and it has been held that a grant of authority to a municipal corporation to license persons operating as common carriers on the streets is an implied grant to use the streets for the purposes of common carriers.⁷⁷

Conditions. In granting the right to make such use of the public streets, the municipality may impose such reasonable terms and conditions as it deems fair and just,⁷⁸ or as the legislature may prescribe,⁷⁹ and it may exact reasonable compensation.⁸⁰ Individuals desiring to avail themselves of such privilege must comply with such terms and conditions whether they are reasonable or unreasonable.⁸¹ Thus a municipality has the right within reasonable limits to prescribe the nature of the securities to be given by those operating vehicles for hire on its public streets;⁸² and an ordinance requiring an indemnity bond, and giving persons damaged through the carrier's fault a right of action against the surety, must be read into the bond, and fixes the rights, as well as the obligations, of its surety.⁸³ It has been held that a bond so given is not an original obligation or indemnity contract, but is merely a collateral undertaking.⁸⁴

§ 1761. Regulation of Use in General

- a. In general
- b. By municipality
- c. Construction of regulations in general

a. In General

The use of the streets for travel and transportation is generally subject to reasonable regulation by the state.

The right to use streets for purposes of travel and transportation is not absolute and unrestricted, but is subject to such reasonable regulations as to the traffic thereon or the manner of using them as the state, in the exercise of its police power, may impose for the safety, convenience, and welfare of the public,⁸⁵ since the regulation of such traffic is

- State highway commission
- The jurisdiction over city streets, which have become part of state highway system, vested in the state highway commission was held not not merely a municipal affair.⁸⁶ Regulations which have for their purpose the keeping open of public streets for travel and transportation are for a proper legislative purpose and should be upheld,⁸⁷ unless adjudged arbitrary or discriminatory,⁸⁸ or unduly burdensome or unreasonable.⁸⁹ State traffic regulations are sometimes made inapplicable to specific municipalities adopting ordinances regulating traffic within the municipal limits.⁹⁰ It has been held that the power of appropriate public authority over streets is not confined to their use for the sole purpose of travel, but extends to the use thereof for many other purposes required by public convenience.⁹¹

b. By Municipality

Power to regulate the use of the streets as highways is generally conferred on municipal corporations.

The power of a municipal corporation to impose restrictions on the public for the use of streets must be found in some legislative enactment by which such power is conferred on the municipality,⁹² expressly or impliedly,⁹³ since such regulation is not a municipal affair.⁹⁴ However, the power of the legislature to regulate the use of city streets as highways may be, and frequently has been, delegated to municipalities,⁹⁵ or specified departments thereof,⁹⁶ and a municipal corporation, under its delegated police power and power to control and to embrace the power to impose traffic regulations—Cabell v. City of Cottage Grove, 130 P.2d 1013, 170 Or. 256.

General highway traffic laws of state applied without modification to traffic in unincorporated village—Cantrell v. Roberts, La.App., 12 So. 2d 491.

Revision of traffic laws

Highway Traffic Regulation Act was held a general and systematic revision of all traffic laws and repeals all preëxisting and irreconcilable city ordinances pertaining to the same subject matter or classification.—LeVasseur v. Minneapolis St. Ry. Co., 21 N.W.2d 522, 221 Minn. 205.

Public safety commissioner

Traffic law empowering city authorities to make additional traffic regulations does not give commissioner of public safety any more power than that of administering law enacted by common council.—People v. Sullivan, 238 N.Y.S. 253, 135 Misc. 705.

Traffic commission

(1) Under statute conferring on traffic commission full and exclusive legislative authority to adopt and publish traffic regulations, the authority is both administrative and quasi-legislative, with rules and regulations having the force of ordinances when ratified and approved by a general or specific ordinance of a city council.—Houck v. Minton, Tenn., 212 S.W.2d 891.

(2) Under act giving traffic commission authority to adopt traffic regulations, commission's rule whereby certain street was closed to westbound traffic was not invalid for want of notice to complainant who owned property abutting on street.—Houck v. Minton, supra.

Parkways

Term "streets, squares and avenues" in provision authorizing police commissioner to regulate traffic thereon was held used in a generic sense and to include every type of public way used for vehicular traffic, including "parkways."—People, on Complaint of McGuire v. Perry, 23 N.Y.S.2d 769.

Concurrent jurisdiction

Police commissioner and the park commissioner have concurrent jurisdiction over regulation of vehicular traffic on parkways within the city.—People, on Complaint of McGuire, v. Perry, supra.

Traffic congestion

Regulation and prevention of traffic congestion are matters affecting safety and welfare of city, and, hence, are within legislative power of municipality to regulate by ordinance.—McKelley v. City of Murfreesboro, 36 S.W.2d 99, 162 Tenn. 304.

Approval of commission rules

Council had authority formally to approve traffic rules adopted by traffic commission by reference and prescribe a penalty for their violation, but they must be in aid of general law or ordinances enacted in interest of public safety, and, when ratified, and a penalty was fixed for their violation, they derived their force from the general ordinance of the municipality.—*Houck v. power so to regulate implies the power to prohibit, except on observance of authorized regulation.¹

Limitation of municipal power. The municipality has only such powers to regulate the use of the streets as are delegated to it.² Such power is subject to constitutional or statutory restrictions or limitations,³ such as a statutory provision that its traffic regulations shall not materially interfere with the general efficiency of a utility authorized by the public utilities commission.⁴ Its power to regulate the use of its thoroughfares for ordinary and usual purposes should be sparingly exercised,⁵ and only when necessary in the public interest.⁶ Such regulations must be reasonable,⁷ and not arbitrary, oppressive, or discriminatory;⁸ they must operate with equality,⁹ and have some tendency to accomplish the object in view.¹⁰ The municipality, in regulating the right to travel, may not unreasonably or arbitrarily prohibit or restrict it,¹¹ or deprive the public of the right to use the streets for travel by any ordinary or reasonable method of locomotion;¹² nor may it permit one, and refuse another of like qualification and under like conditions, to exercise

Effect of federal aid

Contribution from federal government, under Federal Aid Road Act, to cost of public highway running through city was held not, in absence of legislation by congress, to prevent city from adopting ordinance regulating traffic on such highway for public safety and welfare—Garneau v. Eggers, 174 A. 250, 113 N.J.Law 245.

Review by courts

(1) Power granted to cities to control use of streets is an administrative one which is subject to review by the courts unless otherwise prohibited by statute—Moore v. Cox, Tex.Civ.App., 215 SW 2d 666

(2) Courts may inquire as to reasonableness of exercise of power conferred on city to regulate use of streets, precise manner of exercise of power not having been specified—Haggenjos v. City of Chicago, 168 N.E. 661, 336 Ill. 573.

(3) Determination of city, council as to means for removing causes of traffic congestion cannot be disturbed, unless means adopted are unreasonable.—City of Chicago v. McKinley, 176 N.E. 261, 344 Ill. 297.

Filing ordinance with secretary of state

City's clerk's failure to file certified copy of amendatory traffic ordinance with secretary of state was held not to invalidate ordinance passed after repeal of highway law provision for filing of official copies of local ordinances with secretary of state, where basic ordinance, although directing filing of copy of ordinance, was silent as to filing of amendments.—People v. it.¹³ The municipality may not, under the guise of regulating traffic and use of the streets, lay a license or privilege tax on the use of the streets.¹⁴

Streets on private property. An ordinance regulating the control of vehicles on the street has no application to such vehicles when on private property.¹⁵ However, traffic regulations do apply to privately owned streets which the owners have opened to public travel,¹⁶ and they are applicable alike to members of the general public and owners of the street and their families,¹⁷ since the municipality may regulate the use of vehicles or other means of transportation on all streets rightfully made use of by the public within its limits, regardless of the legal status of such streets¹⁸ or the fee-simple ownership thereof,¹⁹ although in the case of a street over land the fee of which is in the adjoining owner the control is limited to such as is necessary for regulating the easement of public travel thereon.²⁰ A private street open to the public is subject to police regulations while so used, although it may be closed off at regular intervals for the purpose of protecting the title of its owners.²¹

Traffic regulations should be construed to accomplish their fair and legitimate purposes.

A traffic ordinance or regulation should be interpreted according to the ordinary meaning of the words used²² in connection with other portions of such ordinance or regulation,²³ and so as to make it harmonize with other regulations, taking into consideration the purpose it seeks to accomplish.²⁴ Unequivocal and clear language must be given effect.²⁵ While traffic regulations intended to promote safety of travel ought to be so construed as to accomplish their fair and legitimate purposes,²⁶ they ought not to be given an interpretation which will be opposed to common experience,²⁷ and make them an unnatural and unjustifiable burden on travel,²⁸ or so as to make them absurd or unreasonable.²⁹ Ordinances regulating the use of streets as highways are to be construed with respect to changing methods of locomotion³⁰ and environment,³¹ and the constraint of overpowering necessity,³² and, where such an ordinance has been validly enacted, and is not in conflict with the general laws, it must be given full force and effect as a law of the locality to which it applies.³³

General and specific regulation. An ordinance establishing general rules for traffic must give way to specific regulation for congested districts in charge of traffic officers.³⁴

b. Particular Uses and Regulations

§ 1762. Vehicular Traffic

Vehicular traffic on the streets is subject to reasonable regulation by a municipal corporation.

While as a general rule the right of a person to drive a vehicle on a public street without let or hindrance is common to all citizens who have occasion to use the street for pleasure, profit, or advantage,³⁵ ordinarily municipal corporations have power to regulate the traffic of vehicles of all kinds, commonly used within the corporate limits,³⁶ as an exercise of their police powers,³⁷ not inherent,³⁸ but granted to the corporation expressly or impliedly.³⁹ However, such regulations must be reasonable,⁴⁰ definite and certain,⁴¹ and not arbitrary or discriminatory,⁴² and they must comply and not be inconsistent with the statutes conferring the power,⁴³ or with other statutes.⁴⁴ Vehicles merely passing through the municipality may not be included;⁴⁵ but those may be included which belong to nonresidents if publicly used in the municipality,⁴⁶ or if the route terminus is within it.⁴⁷ The power to regulate vehicular traffic over the streets necessarily implies restriction in some respects, and partial prohibition,⁴⁸ and includes the power to impose reasonable conditions and the power to promote the general welfare and prevent accidents.⁴⁹ Regulations which have been upheld as within the power of the municipality include those which create safety zones;⁵⁰ designate main thoroughfares or highways and through streets;⁵¹ designate a portion of a street for the use of foot travelers and a portion for the use of vehicles,⁵² and confine the operation of vehicles on certain streets or parts of streets to travel in one direction;⁵³ es-

establish or set up signal lights and signs and require obedience thereto;⁵⁴ specify the right of way of vehicles at intersections,⁵⁵ and those which require vehicles to stop at the rear of a streetcar which has stopped to take on or to discharge passengers.⁵⁶ However, an ordinance, requiring drivers at all times to comply with any direction of any member of the police force, was held invalid as putting citizens in the arbitrary power of the officer regardless of the circumstances of the case.⁵⁷

Whereas some of the traffic regulations of the use of streets are applicable only to the operation of motor vehicles, and are treated in Motor Vehicles §§ 14-57, many are of a more general nature and apply to other kinds of vehicular traffic as well, such as regulations as to the right of way at street intersections;⁵⁸ as to the carrying of lights on vehicles after dark;⁵⁹ and as to stopping for standing streetcars.⁶⁰

confine themselves to the right-hand side of the center line of the street,⁶¹ with respect to the directions in which they are severally moving,⁶² and to drive as near as possible to the right-hand curb⁶³ or require slowly moving vehicles to keep as close as practicable to the right-hand curb⁶⁴ but a regulation of this nature must be definite and certain.⁶⁵ An ordinance to this effect is not inconsistent with a statute requiring travelers on the highways to turn to the right.⁶⁶

Delegation of authority by municipality. A municipality may vest on designated officials or officers certain powers of discretion to carry into effect the regulations under consideration,⁶⁷ and in doing so may authorize police officers to require drivers to obey their directions in regard to the places which vehicles may occupy.⁶⁸ So, specified officers may be empowered by ordinance to adopt and install traffic control signs and devices where violations of such signs and devices are prohibited by ordinance.⁶⁹ However, the municipality cannot confer on such officials unlimited discretion in prescribing the rules for the regulation of vehicles on the streets or other public places.⁷⁰ An ordinance authorizing specified officers to designate through-traffic streets has been upheld as a delegation of administrative power,⁷¹ but it has also been held that the city council cannot delegate to an official the authority to designate arterial streets, but must designate them by ordinance.⁷²

§ 1763. — Kinds of Vehicles and Equipment

- a. In general
- b. Weight of vehicles or loads
- c. Traction engines
- d. Tires

a. In General

Where the power has been duly conferred on a municipal corporation, it may reasonably classify vehicular traffic and restrict certain vehicles to specified streets or parts thereof.

In the control and regulation of the use of its streets a municipal corporation may make any reasonable classification of vehicular traffic,⁷³ and may restrict particular classes of vehicles to certain parts of the streets.⁷⁴ Subject to the limitation that the regulation must not be such as will deprive a citizen of access to his home or business house,⁷⁵ and provided such regulations are reasonable and not discriminatory,⁷⁶ certain classes of vehicles may be excluded from particular streets or driveways,⁷⁷ such as traffic teams from streets set apart for pleasure driving only.⁷⁸ However, the power to regulate vehicles using the streets does not authorize prohibition;⁷⁹ nor does the power to regulate traffic authorize a regulation prohibiting all vehicular travel on certain streets or ways,⁸⁰ or closing all the streets to vehicles of a specified description,⁸¹ unless the municipality has plenary and exclusive power of its streets and alleys.⁸² Where the power to do so is expressly granted, a municipality may prohibit all vehicles of a particular class from operating on its streets or other public places,⁸³ as, for example, advertising vehicles.⁸⁴

The state under its control and authority over public streets, as discussed supra § 1686, may set apart a particular way for a peculiar vehicular use, as long as the public is accorded the privilege of exercising that use;⁸⁵ and, if such use is accorded to

Steep grades

A city neighborhood's steep grades which were dangerous to all traffic at certain seasons of year and its residential character warranted a reasonable discrimination in use of its streets by certain forms of traffic most likely to result in injury to life and property where other reasonably convenient routes were available to excluded traffic.—Commonwealth v. Usual business

A city ordinance prohibiting use of streets and alleys by vehicles engaged primarily in advertising, but permitting ordinary business vehicles to bear business notices as long as vehicle is engaged in usual business or regular work of owner, is not arbitrary and unreasonable but constitutes a valid exercise of city's "police power."—State v. Hind, 10 N.W.2d 258, 143 Neb. 479.

Duty of police commissioner

Police commissioner had duty under charter to restrict use of streets so as to prevent use thereof by covered wagon drawn by team of burros for advertising purposes, thereby impeding traffic by forcing the faster moving motor-driven vehicles to go around and inevitably cause traffic congestion.—People v. Berkowitz, 39 N.Y.S.2d 236.

Vehicles operating under franchise

The charter powers to regulate the use of the streets authorized the local authorities to prevent the display of advertisement on the outside of stage coaches operating under a franchise which did not authorize their use for advertising purposes.—Fifth Ave. Coach Co. v. New York, 111 N.Y.S. 759, 58 Misc. 401, affirmed 110 N.Y.S. 1037, 126 App.Div. 657, 86 N.E. 824, 194 N.Y. 19, 21 L.R.A., N.S., 744, affirmed 31 S.Ct. 709, 221 U.S. 467, 55 L.Ed. 815.

a few designated persons exclusively, it is improper.⁸⁶

b. Weight of Vehicles or Loads

The weight of vehicles using the streets may be regulated by municipal corporations.

A municipal corporation, under its power to control and regulate the use of its streets, may limit the weight of the vehicles or loads that may be transported over its streets,⁸⁷ within the weight limits prescribed by state statute.⁸⁸ It may prohibit the operation of any vehicle which, with or without its load, because of the weight, destroys or permanently injures the streets;⁸⁹ and a statutory provision, exempting a city from the provision of a traffic law forbidding the use of all trucks that permanently injure the streets, does not prevent such city from enacting a traffic ordinance forbidding such use.⁹⁰ It may prohibit the hauling of heavy loads weighing more than a certain number of pounds on wagons having tires of less than a certain width,⁹¹ or over specified streets of the city,⁹² or it may so limit the weight of the load that may be hauled unless the load consists of an article which cannot be divided.⁹³ It may also restrict excessive loads to a certain portion of the street,⁹⁴ and the question whether such a regulation is reasonable and valid with respect to a particular way and locality depends on whether the portion of the street which may be used by heavily loaded vehicles is reasonably suitable for the purpose.⁹⁵ The fact that the ordinance increases the cost of deliveries to abutting owners by compelling heavy vehicles to take an indirect route to avoid the restricted streets does not make it unreasonable.⁹⁶

Permission of board. An ordinance forbidding the use of heavy vehicles on a driveway except "upon special permission" of a board, without prescribing any general conditions on which such permission shall be granted, is unreasonable and invalid as vesting the board with arbitrary power.⁹⁷

The use of the streets by traction engines is generally subject to reasonable regulation by municipal corporations.

The exclusive power of a municipal corporation over its streets as conferred on it by statute does not include power to prohibit the running of a traction engine on the streets,⁹⁸ nor is such power included in its power to regulate the use of coaches, hacks, drays, and other vehicles for hire;⁹⁹ and, therefore, an ordinance is unreasonable and void which prohibits the operation of such a vehicle on the streets,¹ especially where it arbitrarily deprives a person of an opportunity to carry on his business.² However, under its power to control, regulate, and protect its streets, a municipality may place reasonable restrictions on the operation of such vehicles on its streets, with the view of protecting such streets from destruction or injury.³ It may prohibit the operation of such vehicles, unless precautions are taken by the use of planks to prevent injury to the paved street,⁴ or unless the tires are properly protected,⁵ and may delegate to a particular officer the authority to determine whether such protection is sufficient.⁶

Under its power to control and regulate the location and use of steam engines for the public safety, and to exercise exclusive control over the streets, a city may adopt an ordinance making it unlawful to operate any steam engine over the streets, except on a railroad track,⁷ and on special permit from the mayor;⁸ and, where such an ordinance applies alike to all persons engaged in the operation of steam rollers and engines, it is neither discriminatory nor unreasonable;⁹ nor is it invalid as giving absolute power to a particular officer arbitrarily and oppressively to refuse to issue a permit, since he is required to exercise his discretion in the enforcement of the ordinance for the benefit of the general public.¹⁰ However, an ordinance restricting the use of such vehicles is invalid when repugnant to the provisions of a statute declaring the state's policy in such matters.¹¹

Precautions as to travelers. In the absence of statute the owner of a traction engine passing along a street need not send a man ahead to assist in emergencies and to prevent accidents.¹² A statute requiring persons in charge of steam engines to take certain precautions to avoid injury to travelers, being penal in character, must be strictly construed,¹³ and, hence, a requirement that one in charge of a traction engine shall stop at a prescribed distance from travelers with horses or other stock does not apply to one taking a traction engine across a vacant block, although the way used by the engine is used permissively by the public.¹⁴ It has been held that a statute that any person using a traction or road engine on a street shall send a person in advance to warn approaching teams does not apply to a steam roller used in making or repairing city streets;¹⁵ but on the other hand it has been held that a like provision as to a steam engine applies to a steam road roller.¹⁶

A municipal corporation may generally regulate the width of the tires on vehicles passing over the streets.

Under its power to locate, establish, and protect its streets, a municipal corporation may regulate the width of the tires of vehicles passing over the streets;¹⁷ and an ordinance regulating the width of tires to be used on all kinds of vehicles used on the streets is not unreasonable,¹⁸ or discriminatory,¹⁹ or in derogation of common right.²⁰ However, where the power expressly given to the municipality in this respect is to regulate "the width of the tires of all vehicles for heavy transportation," it means vehicles constructed for carrying heavy loads; and an ordinance regulating the width of tires of all vehicles in accordance with the size of the axles exceeds the power of the city since it makes no discrimination between vehicles for light and heavy transportation,²¹ even though the city charter empowers it to regulate the use of its streets.²² A municipality may forbid the use of the streets by vehicles with certain objectionable tires.²³

§ 1764. — Speed

The speed of vehicles using the streets is subject to reasonable regulation by municipal corporations.

The state legislature, under its power to control public streets, as discussed supra § 1686, may limit the rate of speed for riding or driving on the streets of a municipality,²⁴ or it may delegate its power so to do to the municipality;²⁵ but a statute regulating the speed of vehicles approaching a highway crossing has no application to city street crossings.²⁶ A municipal corporation, also, under its police power, and within the limits of the power delegated to it,²⁷ may prohibit fast driving,²⁸ but not slow driving,²⁹ and may fix a maximum speed for riding or driving on the city streets,³⁰ provided such speed is not in excess of that provided by statute,³¹ or the regulation does not otherwise conflict with the state regulation of the same matter.³² An ordinance regulating the speed of all vehicles is not an attempt to interfere with the reasonable exercise of the right of passage over a public highway, but is merely an endeavor to regulate and prevent abuse in the exercise of that right;³³ and, although the speed limit is fixed at a high rate, such an ordinance is not invalid on the theory that only motor vehicles can make such a speed, and hence that the provision discriminates against the operators of motor vehicles;³⁴ nor is a statute or ordinance regulating speed invalid because different rates of speed are allowed in different portions of the prescribed territory.³⁵

Reasonableness. A regulation prescribing such rate of speed must be reasonable,³⁶ and regulations have been held reasonable which limit the rate of speed to from six to eight miles an hour,³⁷ to "an ordinary trot,"³⁸ a "common traveling pace,"³⁹ or "a moderate footpace."⁴⁰

§ 1765. — Turning and Crossing

Vehicles using the streets are subject to regulation by municipal corporations with respect to turning and crossing.

Regulations have been enacted and held reasonable and valid⁴¹ which prescribe the manner in which vehicles may turn or cross from one side of the street to the other side,⁴² and the warnings or signals to be given to others of the intention to turn or cross;⁴³ or which prohibit vehicles from crossing the street elsewhere than at an intersection;⁴⁴ or which prescribe the manner of crossing intersections⁴⁵ when pedestrians are crossing;⁴⁶

or which prescribe the manner in which vehicles shall turn when entering an intersecting street to the right⁴⁷ or to the left.⁴⁸ An ordinance requiring the driver of a vehicle, in crossing from one side of the street to the other side, to turn to the left, so as to head in the direction in which traffic is moving, does not require such a traveler to cross at an intersection or at any particular point in the street.⁴⁹

§ 1766. — Stopping and Standing

- a. Right to stop or park
- b. Regulation and control

a. Right to Stop or Park

Parking of vehicles on the streets for a reasonable time is an incident of the right to travel and a privilege to be exercised with due regard to the primary right of the public to unobstructed passage and subject to reasonable regulation.

Ordinarily, in the absence of contrary regulation, a person riding or driving in a vehicle may stop or park for a reasonable time at any point on a street where he chooses,⁵⁰ such as at the curb,⁵¹ although some traffic congestion is caused thereby,⁵²

as long as sufficient room is left for passage of other vehicles,⁵³ and private rights are not interfered with,⁵⁴ and, if he stops temporarily to repair his vehicle, he is not a trespasser, but is entitled to the rights of a traveler.⁵⁵ Parking on the streets, however, is a mere privilege,⁵⁶ in derogation of the common-law easement of travel and transport,⁵⁷ and the abutting owner's qualified right of ingress and egress,⁵⁸ and must be exercised under the conditions imposed by municipal regulation.⁵⁹ Accordingly, a person has no right to obstruct traffic unduly by standing or parking his vehicle on a street for an unreasonable length of time,⁶⁰ or while he goes into a neighboring building to transact business.⁶¹

b. Regulation and Control

The parking of vehicles in the streets is subject to reasonable regulation by municipal corporations.

A municipal corporation, under its general powers to control and protect its streets, may enact ordinances to secure unobstructed passage thereon by vehicles,⁶² and, with this end in view, in the exercise of the police powers conferred on it,⁶³ it may regulate or prohibit parking,⁶⁴ according to the

(1) An ordinance requiring left turns to be made to the right of center does not require a vehicle to go beyond the mathematical center of the intersection where the streets meet at angles and it would be impractical to do so.—Felber v. Union Electric Light & Power Co., supra.

(2) Under an ordinance requiring vehicles when turning to the left from one street into another to keep to the right of the center of the intersection, where one side of the street is so obstructed as to be impracticable for use in ordinary travel, a vehicle is required only to keep to the right of the center of the intersection of two currents of travel as defined and determined for practicable purposes by customary use of a street.—Karpeles v. decisions on the question, in its discretion,⁶⁵ as long as such regulation is reasonable and necessary for public safety⁶⁶ and does not transcend constitutional bounds,⁶⁷ or conflict with a statute.⁶⁸ Within this power and sustained as valid are regulations which provide that no vehicle shall remain on specified streets in such a manner as to obstruct traffic,⁶⁹ which define zones where parking is limited or prohibited,⁷⁰ which forbid the leaving of any vehicle standing on a street elsewhere than on the right hand side thereof with respect to the direction in which it fronts,⁷¹ or which forbid standing or parking on any street other than parallel to, and within a specified distance of, the curb.⁷²

An ordinance prohibiting vehicles from stopping in the streets for more than a prescribed length of time has been held valid;⁷³ but such a regulation applies to a voluntary, as distinguished from an involuntary, stoppage.⁷⁴ It has also been held to apply to licensed peddlers as well as to others;⁷⁵ but an ordinance prohibiting the leaving or placing of any carts in the street has been held not violated by a licensed pushcart peddler remaining half an hour with the cart at one place on a busy street for the purpose of selling his wares.⁷⁶

Delegation of power by municipality. Where the right to regulate parking has been conferred on the city council, it may delegate administration of its regulations to specified administrative officers,⁷⁷ and may even confer power on such officers to regulate parking in times of emergency.⁷⁸ However, power to designate permanent no-parking streets cannot be so delegated since such designation is a legislative act.⁷⁹

Providing parking space. As a necessary adjunct to the right to regulate traffic, the municipality may furnish parking space.⁸⁰

Leaving vehicle unattended. A regulation is reasonable and valid which prohibits the leaving of a team of horses, or horse and vehicle, unattended in the street.⁸¹ Such a regulation applies only where the horse and vehicle are deserted or abandoned, without anyone in charge, for the time;⁸² it does not apply where there is a mere stopping of the horse and a vehicle in a street,⁸³ or where, as expressly excepted by some regulations, there is such a temporary abandonment of the reins as is reasonably incident to loading and unloading.⁸⁴ An ordinance prohibiting leaving a vehicle on the streets was held applicable only to a more or less permanent occupation of the streets by vehicles when not in use,⁸⁵ and not to the leaving of a vehicle on the street while making deliveries therefrom.⁸⁶ Under some regulations unattended horses or draft animals must be hitched or fastened in the prescribed manner when left unattended on the streets.⁸⁷

Parking meters; fees. The power to regulate the parking of vehicles on city streets implies the power to exact a fee sufficient to cover the expenses of maintaining the regulations,⁸⁸ and includes the right to install parking meters in congested areas.⁸⁹

Public vehicles for hire; hack stands. With a view to securing unobstructed passage of vehicles, regulations have been upheld as valid traffic regulations, which prescribe where hacks or public vehicles for hire may or may not park or stand,⁹⁰ such as at railroad depots,⁹¹ the number of hacks that may use a stand⁹² or which forbid hackmen to stand or solicit patronage on the street,⁹³ or in any place other than the place assigned to them.⁹⁴ On the other hand, an ordinance has been held unreasonable and invalid which forbids the stopping or standing of any vehicle for hire, on certain named streets or in front of a public hotel, except when actually engaged in receiving or discharging passengers or freight.⁹⁵ An ordinance providing that cabs shall stand on certain parts of certain streets and that any violation thereof shall be a misdemeanor does not make a person standing a cab elsewhere than as provided guilty of a misdemeanor.⁹⁶

Private property. A municipality may not prohibit parking on private property,⁹⁷ and an ordinance which purports to regulate traffic on public streets does not prohibit such parking.⁹⁸ However, parking may be regulated or prohibited on private streets which the owners have voluntarily permitted the general public to use for public travel.⁹⁹

Damage from prohibition of parking. Property owners cannot recover against the municipality for losses resulting from the maintenance of no-parking signs in front of their property.¹

Street use as matter of right

A private street, title to which rested in trustees for benefit of lot owners of a city addition, public use of which did not arise by dedication, condemnation, or prescription, but which was used by public, was not a "public street" under ordinance prohibiting parking on way or place open to use of public as a matter of right—City of Clayton v. Nemours, 182 S.W.2d 57, 353 Mo. 61, appeal dismissed 65 S.Ct. 560, two cases, 323 U.S. 684, 89 L.Ed. 554.

It has been held that traffic regulations are not to be construed as applying to public officials engaged in the performance of a public duty where speed and right of way are a necessity.² It is generally held that regulations limiting the rate of speed for riding or driving on streets, as discussed supra § 1764, do not apply to the vehicles of the fire department when responding to an alarm of fire,³ or to a salvage corps,⁴ or to police officers in the performance of their duties.⁵ In accordance with these principles a speed regulation is not invalid because it makes speed limitations inapplicable to vehicles operated by the fire and police departments;⁶ and, on the other hand, an ordinance, making it a misdemeanor for any person intentionally to ride or drive any horse, mule, or other beast faster than an ordinary traveling gait in any of the streets of the city, is unreasonable when sought to be applied to the fire department in driving to a fire.⁷

Ambulances. An ambulance is within the terms and scope of an ordinance limiting the rate of speed for driving a horse or vehicle through the streets,⁸ and a regulation giving ambulances the right of way over other vehicles does not authorize the driver of an ambulance to exceed the speed limit.⁹

b. Right of Way

Vehicles operated by the municipal fire and police departments may be accorded the right of way over other vehicles using the streets.

There is no common-law right of way of vehicles of a municipal fire department over other vehicles;¹⁰ but it has been considered that the right of way should be given to such vehicles when a destructive fire is, or is supposed to be, in progress,¹¹ and regulations expressly granting this right or privilege have been frequently enacted by statute or ordinance, which have been upheld.¹² Regulations have been held reasonable and valid which give a fire insurance patrol the right of way in the streets over all vehicles,¹³ except vehicles carrying the United States mail,¹⁴ and under such a regulation a fire patrol wagon has the right of way over one riding a motorcycle,¹⁵ notwithstanding a statute giving the owners of motorcycles the same rights on the public streets as all other persons;¹⁶ and the driver of such a patrol wagon may assume that persons approaching a street crossing will yield the right of way to him.¹⁷ Generally, ordinances of this nature must not be inconsistent or conflict with constitutional or statutory provisions,¹⁸ and a general law covering the subject takes precedence over an inconsistent ordinance.¹⁹

Ambulances. Ordinances have been upheld which give ambulances the right of way at street intersections.²⁰

Mail wagons. An ordinance which gives the United States mail wagons, when used in collecting mail, a right of way over other vehicles is valid only as a police regulation to insure such mail a free course;²¹ and it does not create a right of action in favor of mail collectors against one who violates the ordinance.²²

Physician's vehicle. An ordinance giving physicians, with police permits, the right of way at intersections, without any qualifying and safeguarding provisions, directly tends to jeopardize the public safety which a statutory right of way rule was intended to promote, and is invalid.²³

Police. A statute giving police officers in the exercise of due care for the safety of the public the right of way is applicable to a city street.²⁴

§ 1768. — Bicycles

The use of the streets by bicycles is subject to reasonable regulation by a municipal corporation.

Bicycles on the street are generally subject to all just and reasonable requirements for the safety and convenience of other users of such streets;²⁵ and a regulation has been held valid which requires a bicyclist to ring a bell when approaching a crossing or crosswalk;²⁶ but a municipal regulation of the use of such vehicles must be consistent with statutory regulations thereof.²⁷ Local authorities have been held to have power to provide for one-way traffic of bicycles.²⁸

Compliance with statute

Posting of a one-way street is sufficient to comply with the requirements of a statute, if a sign is erected at each intersection on that side of the street opposite to the direction of traffic.—Thompson v. Philadelphia Transp. Co., 58 Pa. Dist. & Co. 334, affirmed 53 A.2d 120, 357 Pa. 3.

Philadelphia Transp. Co., 53 A.2d 120, 357 Pa. 3.

power to provide for the safety of its inhabitants, the city has authority to pass an ordinance requiring bicycles on the streets after dark to carry lights.²⁹ Such an ordinance is not contrary to a constitutional provision requiring all laws of a general nature to have a uniform operation, although it applies only to bicycles, and not to riders of other silently running vehicles;³⁰ nor is such ordinance contrary to the provision of the federal constitution forbidding a state to abridge any of the privileges or immunities of citizens.³¹

Rate of speed. The speed of a bicycle cannot be regulated by an ordinance which was clearly intended to apply only to animal-drawn vehicles³² or by a statute fixing the speed of motor vehicles.³³

License fee. In the absence of statute so authorizing, a municipal corporation may not require the payment of a license fee for the use of a bicycle on the city streets.³⁴

§ 1769. Processions

The use of streets for parades or processions is a legitimate subject of municipal regulation.

The ordinary obstruction of a street by a parade or procession does not of itself constitute a nuisance;³⁵ but the use of streets for conducting parades or processions thereon is a legitimate subject of municipal regulation,³⁶ under the powers delegated to the municipality,³⁷ although ordinances for that purpose must be in general terms and apply to all alike.³⁸ In the exercise of this power, the municipality has authority to give consideration, without unfair discrimination, to time, place, and manner in relation to the other proper uses of the streets.³⁹ Ordinances prohibiting parades on the city streets without a permit have been upheld as valid,⁴⁰ although the power to issue the permit⁴¹ and designate the time and place for the parade⁴² is conferred on specified officers; the issuance of a requisite permit under such an ordinance rests in the sound discretion of the designated official.⁴³

On the other hand, it has been held that an ordinance forbidding parades with music without first having obtained the permission of the city council,⁴⁴ the mayor, or in his absence, the president of the city council, city clerk, or city marshal, in the order named,⁴⁵ the mayor or council,⁴⁶ or the chief of police,⁴⁷ is unreasonable because it leaves the power of permitting or restraining processions and their courses to an unregulated, official discretion, when the whole matter, if regulated at all, must be by permanent and legal provisions, and must operate generally and impartially.

§ 1770. Causing Crowd to Collect

The use of the streets for the assembly of persons thereon is subject to reasonable regulation to prevent obstruction of the right of passage.

Streets are intended for the purpose of passage, as discussed supra § 1758, and not for assemblage,⁴⁸ and, although the fact that a person by reason of his speaking, preaching, or other conduct collects a crowd in the street, does not of itself constitute a nuisance,⁴⁹ if one carries on his business or in any way conducts himself so as to collect a crowd of people in a highway and thereby unduly interfere with traffic, he is guilty of creating a nuisance.⁵⁰ In accordance with these principles, regulations, by statute or ordinance, have been upheld as a valid exercise of the police power, which have for their object the keeping of the streets free for public travel,⁵¹ such as an ordinance which prohibits persons from "idly standing, loafing or congregating" on the streets;⁵² or which prohibits an assemblage of persons on the street, without a permit from a specified municipal officer, so as to obstruct traffic;⁵³ and the requiring of such a permit does not take away the constitutional rights of the people to assemble.⁵⁴

The issuance of the requisite permit rests in the sound discretion of the official designated.⁵⁵ Under a statutory power to permit assemblages on streets, a city may limit the use of the street for such purpose to proper times and places,⁵⁶ but the action of the authorities in granting or refusing permits for such use of the streets must be reasonable, and not arbitrary or governed by whim or caprice.⁵⁷ Such a regulation, however, must not interfere with the personal liberty of a citizen as guaranteed to him by the constitution and laws.⁵⁸ Where there is a

§ 1771. Unusual Noises

The making of noise on the streets which may disturb travelers and lessen the precautions to be taken by them is subject to reasonable regulation by municipal corporations.

Among the activities which may be regulated, or even prohibited, under the police power, is the making of disturbing noises on the public streets whereby travelers thereon are disturbed or their attention diverted so as to lessen the necessary precaution to be exercised by such travelers.⁶¹ However, in the absence of statutory authority therefor, an ordinance prohibiting the making of a noise on the streets of such a character as to annoy and disturb others, and providing for the arrest of a person who fails or refuses to desist from making such a noise, on being ordered to do so, was held invalid, as being unreasonable and not essential or indispensable to carrying into effect any of the municipal purposes,⁶² and as being oppressive and in contravention of common rights.⁶³

The legislature may delegate to a municipality power to make ordinances declaring it unlawful to beat drums or tambourines or make any noise with instruments on the streets without the written permission of a specified municipal officer;⁶⁴ and it has been held that such an ordinance is authorized by a statute giving power to make ordinances for the preservation of the public peace and to regulate and prevent on the streets any act endangering persons or property.⁶⁵ An ordinance prohibiting any noise or assemblage of persons in the street to the annoyance or disturbance of others is not violated by a Salvation Army parade and singing of religious songs.⁶⁶

Itinerant musicians. If authorized by statute, a municipal corporation may authorize a particular municipal board to adopt rules for regulating and restraining itinerant musicians in the streets and public places of the city;⁶⁷ and such rules when made are not unreasonable or invalid in requiring the taking out of a license, and the payment of a small fee therefor, by such a musician.⁶⁸ A cornet player in a religious organization parade is an "itinerant musician" within such an ordinance,⁶⁹ and such player is not protected by the fact that his act was done as a matter of religious worship only.⁷⁰

§ 1772. Sports in Streets

The use of the streets for purposes of sport is subject to reasonable regulation by a municipal corporation.

The right of the public to use the streets of a city for the purpose of mere sport, if there is such a right, is subject to reasonable regulation or restriction by the city,⁷¹ and regulations have been enacted

Valid ordinance

Ordinance, which related solely to regulation of use of public streets, preserving them for benefit of public against obstructions, and did not impose a restriction on what may be uttered or published, is a valid exercise of the police power and is not unconstitutional, merely because it operated to prevent one from presenting his ideas to as large a number of persons at a given place as he might think desirable.—Ex parte Bodkin, 194 P.2d 588, 86 Cal.App.2d 208.

Practical exigencies and common experience may permit recognition of degrees of harm from conduct of different classes of street meetings and limitation of regulation to classes, where need therefor is deemed clearest by city ordinance.—People, on Complaint of O'Connor v. Smith, 188 N.E. 745, 263 N.Y. 255, appeal dismissed Smith v. People of State of New York on Complaint of O'Connor, 54 S.Ct. 775, 292 U.S. 606, 78 L.Ed. 1468.

Religious meetings

Fact that city ordinance, requiring permits for street meetings to preach religion or expound atheism, does not cover all street meetings is no objection to reasonable classification.—People, on Complaint of O'Connor v. Smith, 188 N.E. 745, 263 N.Y. 255, appeal dismissed Smith v. People of State of New York on Complaint of O'Connor, 54 S.Ct. 775, 292 U.S. 606, 78 L.Ed. 1468.

Permit to play baseball

which forbid games, sports, or amusements in the streets, which have a tendency to interfere with travel thereon;⁷² and as long as the restrictions imposed are reasonable, for a public purpose, and not arbitrary, the courts should not interfere with their enforcement.⁷³

Coasting. Coasting on a public street which is not put to an extended public use, in the absence of an express prohibition by ordinance, is not necessarily such an illegal act as to constitute a nuisance;⁷⁴ and since, under some circumstances, it would be proper to allow it, the licensing of such a use of a street is within the legislative and governmental discretion of the municipal authorities;⁷⁵ and this discretion cannot be judicially reviewed in the absence of any provision that it may be.⁷⁶ However, coasting may be prohibited by statute,⁷⁷ and authority to regulate the use of sleds or other vehicles on the streets for coasting is sometimes expressly conferred on the municipality;⁷⁸ a city having exclusive power over its streets has authority to prohibit or to empower its officers to stop and suppress such coasting,⁷⁹ except on designated streets.⁸⁰ An ordinance prohibiting coasting on certain named streets excludes the act of coasting, as far as confined to streets not enumerated, from the operation of a general ordinance prohibiting games, interfering with the free and safe use of the streets, on all streets of the municipality.⁸¹

Roller skating. An ordinance which prohibits roller skating on a street only as a sport does not infringe the right of the public to travel on the street on roller skates;⁸² and, where a portion of a street on which such skating is prohibited had been so given up to the sport as to constitute a serious injury to abutting property owners, if not an unreasonable obstruction of traffic, the ordinance is neither unreasonable nor arbitrary.⁸³ An ordinance is a valid exercise of the city's police power, which prohibits a person on roller skates from grasping any vehicle moving on the street,⁸⁴ even though its terms are regarded as including an inhibition against such act by the owner of the vehicle.⁸⁵

§ 1773. Moving Building on Streets

- a. In general
- b. Regulation and restriction
- c. Interference with use by others

a. In General

Use of the streets for moving buildings is a special and extraordinary use.

A citizen has a common-law right to make a reasonable use of the streets for the purpose of moving a building across or along the streets from one location to another.⁸⁶ The primary and ordinary use of a street, however, as discussed supra § 1758, is for the purpose of travel and transportation by the general public, and as its use for moving buildings is for the sole benefit of the owner of the building to be moved, it is an unusual and extraordinary use,⁸⁷ and is not within the rights enjoyed by the public as a use of the public streets,⁸⁸ notwithstanding the city charter confers on the city council power to regulate the subject.⁸⁹ However, such a use, although not for the benefit of the municipality or its inhabitants generally, may be considered a public use in the sense that it may be permitted by the municipality.⁹⁰

b. Regulation and Restriction

The use of the streets for moving buildings from one location to another is subject to regulation by municipal corporations.

Being an unusual or extraordinary use, the moving of a building across or along a public street is subject to such reasonable regulations and restrictions as the municipal corporation, under its power to regulate and control its streets, may impose.⁹¹ It might even be competent for a municipality to prohibit the moving of houses along its streets, at least in populous districts;⁹² but it has been held that, while the common council has the power to enact by general ordinance regulations for the moving of buildings through the public streets, it cannot exercise such power in each case by resolution.⁹³

Permit. Under the powers delegated to the municipality,⁹⁴ regulations have been upheld and enforced which require that, before use of the streets may be made for the moving of a building, a permit or license therefor must be obtained from certain municipal authorities,⁹⁵ and make the issuance of such permit dependent on applicant's compliance with certain conditions or requirements provided by the regulation.⁹⁶ The power of a municipality in this regard is not legislative, but simply administrative;⁹⁷ and such an ordinance comes within the

House movers' bond

(1) Under some regulations house movers are required to give a bond to the city indemnifying the city and others from damages resulting from the moving of a house.—Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Woodruff, 77 P.2d 36, 182 Okl. 330.

(2) Statute authorizing the requirement from one about to move a building over a street or other public highway of a sum of money sufficient to cover the reasonable expense of the removal expresses the general law of the state, and, hence, a village ordinance requiring a substantial sum in excess was ultra vires.—Moore v. Village of Gilbert, 289 N.W. 837, 207 Minn. 75.

(3) The conditions of the regulation are to be read into and made part of the bond.—Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Woodruff, supra.

(4) The owner of the house being moved cannot recover on such a bond for damage to the house.—Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Woodruff, supra.

Discretion

Issuance of permits involves some exercise of discretion.—Evans v. King, 230 N.W. 848, 57 S.D. 109.

Payment of taxes

City ordinance, enacted under authority to regulate streets and alleys, which denied right to remove building solely on failure to pay certain taxes, was held void as unreasonable.—City of Yale v. Davenport, 54 P. 2d 335, 175 Okl. 629.

97. Utah.—Eureka v. Wilson, 48 P. 41, 15 Utah 53, affirmed 19 S.Ct. 317, 173 U.S. 32, 43 L.Ed. 603.

police power of the state,⁹⁸ and is not unconstitutional.⁹⁹ If the ordinance requires that such a permit shall issue on certain conditions being complied with, the issuing official cannot refuse a permit, on such compliance being made;¹ nor can he question the character of applicant, where such applicant has been duly licensed to remove buildings as required by the ordinance.²

A permit to move a building of described dimensions through a city street does not justify the moving of a larger building.³ An owner who obtains permission of the municipality to move his building through the city streets is under an obligation to complete the moving within a reasonable time,⁴ and, if he fails to do so and the building is allowed to obstruct travel and become a public nuisance, the municipality may, after notice to the owner, destroy or remove the building without liability therefor, unless its action is so unreasonable or unjust as to be inconsistent with legal principles.⁵

Revocation of permit. Where it appears, after a building had been moved a short distance, that injury to trees has already resulted, and that further injury will result, the permit may be revoked by the municipality under its power to direct the regulating and planting of shade and ornamental trees along the streets and to prevent the injury and defacement of such trees,⁶ and the fact that the holder of the permit has given a bond conditioned that he will not injure the trees does not give him a right to injure them;⁷ nor does the city's failure to ascertain that the moving of the building could not be done without a breach of an ordinance protecting shade trees give him a right to damages for a revocation of the permit.⁸ However, where the moving of such building is not affected by an ordinance at the time the building is moved into the street, a city department cannot thereafter interfere with its being moved,⁹ and a permanent injunction to this effect may be granted.¹⁰

The use of the streets for moving buildings must be made with reasonable regard to public rights.

Neither the moving of a building nor the operation of a telegraph, telephone, or other public service line along a street is an original or primary use of the street, but both are permissible under proper restrictions and with due regard to the rights of others;¹¹ and the use of a public street to move a building, requiring consent of the proper municipal authorities, also requires exercise of reasonable care so as not to interfere unreasonably with the public right,¹² the question whether the use made of the street is a reasonable one being a question of fact and usage in each particular case.¹³

Even where permission is given to use the streets, such use is subordinate to any other lawful use to which the street was subject when the permit was granted,¹⁴ such as the usual and ordinary running of the cars of a street railroad;¹⁵ and it has been held that a street railway is not under any duty to remove obstructing posts or poles on demand of the mover of the building.¹⁶ However, where the moving of a building, if done with municipal authority, does not unreasonably obstruct public travel, or unduly invade private rights, and the work is done with due expedition, it does not create a nuisance;¹⁷ nor does it give a right of action in damages.¹⁸

Wires of public service company. Under the statutes of some jurisdictions, a mover of a building, under permission from the municipal authorities, has the right, on giving a prescribed notice thereof, to cut the wires of a public service company to permit the passage of the building;¹⁹ and regulations have been upheld, as not depriving a public service company of its property without due process of law,²⁰ or by eminent domain,²¹ under which regulations such company may be required to remove its poles and wires temporarily to allow the passage of buildings, when found by the proper authorities to be necessary,²² and to make such removal at the company's own expense.²³ Even in the absence of statutory or municipal regulations as to raising or removing wires or poles, it has been held that the expense thereof should be borne by the company, where the interference is not unreasonable and the expense inconsiderable.²⁴

On the other hand, under other regulations, such wires or poles need not be moved by, or at the expense of, the public service company, but such changes, if necessary to permit of the moving of the building, must be made by, or at the expense of, the house mover;²⁵ and under some regulations house movers are required to furnish bond in a specified sum to pay such expenses before any building may be moved along the streets.²⁶ Where a permit to move a building prohibits the interference with wires for the purpose of moving, the mover may be enjoined except on condition that he give reasonable notice to the company to remove the wires and execute a bond to pay the reasonable expense thereof.²⁷ It has also been held that a house mover is not justified in cutting wires which do not hang lower than is authorized by the municipality.²⁸

§ 1774. Other Uses and Regulations

- a. In general
- b. Use for business purposes

a. In General

An unusual or exceptional use of the streets may be prohibited.

Subordinate to the primary right of the general public to use the streets for travel and transportation, as discussed supra § 1758, every citizen has a further and secondary right to use the streets²⁹ which is permissive in character,³⁰ and may be restricted, limited, modified, and terminated by ordinance within the powers of the municipality enacted for the public good;³¹ but no individual has the right to make a special or exceptional use of the streets not common to all, except by grant from the sovereign power.³² An unusual or exceptional use of the streets may be regulated or prohibited.³³

Displaying signs and placards. An ordinance prohibiting any person on foot in the streets from carrying and displaying a showcard, placard, or sign except in accordance with a permit issued by a specified officer, has been held not invalid.³⁴ Such an ordinance was held not to conflict with or violate a statute which prohibits punishment for an attempt by printing or otherwise to persuade others to do any lawful act.³⁵ On the other hand, a regulation prohibiting the display on the person or the carry-

Test

Whether street user is an ordinary or extraordinary one, and not the element of private gain, is the determining factor in determining extent of city's power to control use of streets under provision in City Home Rule Law authorizing city to adopt local laws in relation to use of streets.—Good Humor Corporation v. City of New York, 36 N.Y.S.2d 85, 264 App.Div. 620, reversed on other grounds 49 N.E.2d 153, 390 N.Y. 312.

ing of any advertising sign on the person or on any vehicle on the streets, but exempting from its application persons exercising a lawful right to picket, was held invalid.³⁶

Driving animals through streets. Power to regulate and control the driving of cattle through the streets will not sustain an ordinance effectually prohibiting such driving.³⁷

Free speech and assembly. While, as discussed supra § 1758, the streets of a city should be administered primarily for use of the people for travel, the streets must be kept open for the use of the people in order that they may exercise their rights of free speech and assembly.³⁸

Picketing. Mass picketing is subject to the paramount right of the public to a safe and convenient use of the streets even where there is no violence or blocking of access to the employer's place of business.³⁹ Any right to picket on the streets is necessarily qualified by the rights of the traveling public;⁴⁰ it cannot be exercised in a manner which interferes with or obstructs traffic.⁴¹ While the state or municipality may regulate the methods of publicity as well as the use of the streets by pickets in a labor dispute,⁴² it cannot, under the guise of regulation, entirely prohibit such means or use.⁴³

Soliciting for labor union. A single act of soliciting a man on the street to join a labor union and pay membership fees therein is not subject to prohibition by ordinance as preventing free use of the streets by the general public.⁴⁴

Wearing masks or disguises. A regulation prohibiting persons from appearing on the streets wearing masks or other disguises which conceal their identity, has been upheld as valid.⁴⁵

Communicating information and disseminating opinion. The public streets have been held to be proper places for the exercise of the freedom of communicating information and disseminating opinion,⁴⁶ and, while the state and municipality may appropriately regulate the privilege in the public interest,⁴⁷ they may not unduly burden or proscribe it.⁴⁸ Accordingly, one may not throw literature broadcast in the streets,⁴⁹ and, in carrying out its duty to keep the streets open for the movement of traffic, the municipality may regulate the conduct of those using the streets to distribute literature,⁵⁰ provided such regulations do not abridge the liberty of those on the streets to make known information by such distribution.⁵¹ The distribution of

Reason for rule

Peaceful picketing in a labor dispute has no tendency to provoke disorder and impede traffic so as to authorize the legislature or a municipality to legislate against all picketing.—City of Reno v. Second Judicial District Court in and for Washoe County, supra.

Closing streets

The barring of pickets from closed street leading to employer's plant at which a strike was in progress was in derogation of rights of unions and union members, since the mere inconvenience of administration cannot be considered sufficient grounds for closing off the street as long as the picketing is peaceful.—United Elec., Radio & Mach. commercial advertising on the city streets does not come within this category and may be entirely prohibited⁵² as an undesirable invasion of, or interference with, the full and free use of the streets by the public for the purposes to which the streets are dedicated,⁵³ and this is true, although such advertising matter has a civic appeal or a moral platitude appended thereto;⁵⁴ but an ordinance merely prohibiting such distribution as an incident to the conduct of a lawful business when such distribution has no tendency to obstruct a free flow of traffic has been held invalid.⁵⁵

It has been held that a municipality, in the exercise of its police power, may prohibit the distribution of handbills which tend to annoy travelers and obstruct the streets,⁵⁶ or which will naturally be thrown by the receiver into the streets and tend to frighten horses,⁵⁷ but as to this there is authority to the contrary.⁵⁸ An ordinance prohibiting the depositing of advertising matter on vehicles parked on the city streets was held to be for a proper legislative purpose,⁵⁹ and not unreasonable when applied to prevent the advertising of a business by affixing handbills to vehicles of others parked on the streets.⁶⁰

There is no inherent or vested right to use the public streets as a place of business for private gain. Such a use is subject to regulation and even prohibition.

Commercial advertising distinguished

(1) With respect to the validity of ordinances, prohibiting distribution of circulars on the ground of protecting streets against being littered, there is a distinction between non-commercial and commercial or advertising matter, in view of the greater tendency to throw away commercial matter.

dangerous to the general public,⁷⁷ or interferes unduly with the use of the streets by others for travel,⁷⁸ or impedes the free flow of traffic on the streets.⁷⁹ However, the power to regulate the use of the streets for business has been held not to include the power to prohibit a business which is not an inherently evil occupation, trade, or business⁸⁰ if there is no substantial or reasonable connection between the prohibition and the evils intended to be suppressed.⁸¹ Thus, the power to regulate the use of the streets is not broad enough to permit the prohibition of the use of the streets by a lawful business recognized by statute for the sole purpose of protecting rent payers and taxpayers against competition from others who do not pay rent or taxes.⁸² An ordinance prohibiting the carrying on of any trade or business in any part of a public street, without a permit therefor, unless such trade or business is authorized by statute or ordinance, is a valid regulation,⁸³ and, when reasonably construed, is not unreasonable or oppressive,⁸⁴ notwithstanding the acts prohibited would not of themselves necessarily obstruct travel or in any way create a nuisance.⁸⁵ If a reasonable or sound basis exists therefor, the municipality may classify persons using the streets for private business purposes,⁸⁶ but it may not discriminate against persons in a like business or of the same class.⁸⁷

Public service company. It has been said to be well settled that as a general rule a public service company cannot use the streets of a municipality unless the municipality consents, or unless it has legislative authority to do so.⁸⁸

c. Use of Sidewalk

The public has a right to use the sidewalks of a municipal corporation for passage. Use of the sidewalks is subject to reasonable regulation.

The public has a right to free passage on the sidewalks,⁸⁹ which it is the duty of the municipal corporation to preserve⁹⁰ as trustees for the public.⁹¹ This primary right to use the sidewalks for the purpose of travel belongs to the public every-

Peddling of merchandise

Peddling merchandise on streets and highways is a lawful vocation, and, although streets and highways are intended primarily for use of pedestrians and vehicles traveling on them, the vending of merchandise by persons who have no fixed place of business and who carry their merchandise in vehicles or on their person, and who seek customers from those passing along streets is a common and traditional use of the streets.—Good Humor Corporation v. City of New York, supra.

Reason for rule

"The carrying on of trade or business in the public streets by one, or by a few persons, might not be of sufficient consequence to materially obstruct the public travel, while if the same thing should be done by many it might create a serious obstruction and nuisance, and what may be done by one in this respect, all must have an equal right to do." —*State v. Particular businesses

An ordinance prohibiting transaction of a particular business on public ways of a city is not invalid because it fails to prohibit, or if prohibited it fails to punish all other violations.—Maupin v. City of Louisville, 144 S.W.2d 237, 284 Ky. 195.

Adverse effect on business

Fact that regulation of business conducted on public streets may adversely affect certain individuals whose commercial welfare is peculiarly dependent on such uses affords no argument against the validity of the ordinance otherwise bearing a reasonable relation to the public health, safety, and general welfare if the ordinance adopts a sound method of classification.—Pittsford v. City of Los Angeles, 122 P.2d 535, 50 Cal.App.2d 25.

where,⁹² not only to the abutting owners.⁹³ The roadway or middle of the street is for the use of animals and vehicles,⁹⁴ the sidewalk is generally reserved exclusively for pedestrians,⁹⁵ and a pedestrian has a right to assume that a sidewalk is safe to walk on even at a point where a private driveway crosses it.⁹⁶

The use of the sidewalk, however, is subject to reasonable regulations and restrictions by the municipality,⁹⁷ under the power delegated to it by the state,⁹⁸ such as the police power.⁹⁹ The governing bodies of municipalities are also generally invested with authority to designate the portion of the street to be used by pedestrians,¹ and, where such designation has been made, abutting owners cannot drive on or along such sidewalk or way,² except to the extent that it is permitted by the regulations.³ However, a municipal regulation which interferes with the lawful use of sidewalks by pedestrians and endangers the safety of pedestrians by permitting vehicles on the sidewalks is unreasonable and invalid.⁴

An ordinance forbidding driving "along" a sidewalk does not apply to passing "across,"⁵ and, even if it did, it would be unreasonable as far as applicable to an abutting owner's rights of ingress or egress.⁶ An ordinance prohibiting the driving, backing, or leaving of any horse or vehicle on a sidewalk does not prohibit the carting of dirt from excavations across the sidewalk;⁷ but, under some regulations, such carting across the sidewalk is prohibited except on a permit from a designated municipal officer⁸ who may exercise a reasonable discretion in granting such permit.⁹

Business use. Use of the sidewalk for business purposes is subject to reasonable regulation for the purpose of preserving and protecting its use as a public thoroughfare.¹⁰ An ordinance has been held valid which prohibits the exposure of produce and commodities on a sidewalk.¹¹ Likewise, an ordinance prohibiting the sale of goods, pamphlets, and other articles on designated sidewalks between specified hours has been held to be a valid and reasonable regulation for public safety and convenience under the police powers of the city,¹² even as applied to the sale of religious pamphlets.¹³ Such an ordinance, however, has been held not to apply to the sale and distribution of religious pamphlets or literature at the prohibited time and place, which do not interfere with the traffic, safety, comfort, or convenience of the public in the use of the streets.¹⁴

Billboards, placards, or signs. The construction and maintenance of signs over the sidewalks of a municipality are subject to reasonable regulation

Statutory definition

Phrase "intended for the use of pedestrians" as used in provision of the statute defining a sidewalk as that portion of the street between the curb lines or the lateral lines of a roadway, and the adjacent property lines "intended for the use of pedestrians," refers to an area actually in use at the time by pedestrians, rather than to some indefinite strip which may subsequently come into use for a pathway or sidewalk.—St. George v. under the police power.¹⁵ Regulations limiting the height of signs which may be so constructed have been held not arbitrary,¹⁶ discriminatory,¹⁷ or unreasonable.¹⁸ A regulation prohibiting the erection and maintenance over the sidewalks of signs of specified types has been upheld as not discriminatory, notwithstanding it excepted therefrom signs erected or maintained on the marquees of theaters, hotels, or public buildings.¹⁹ An ordinance which prohibits the display of any show board, placard, or sign on any sidewalk is reasonable, as applied to the crowded streets of a populous city.²⁰ On the other hand, a regulation prohibiting the display on the person or the carrying of any advertising sign or placard on the person or any vehicle on the sidewalk, but exempting from its application persons exercising a lawful right to picket has been held unreasonable and invalid.²¹

A subsequent ordinance which imposes new conditions as to a sign which was originally constructed under a permit has been held invalid.²² The contrary was also held on the ground that there is no vested right to the maintenance of a sign over the sidewalks,²³ where the original sign was erected by sufferance of the municipality and without a permit.²⁴

go on the sidewalk is not void for unreasonableness, because the driver is thereby bound at all hazards to prevent their going on the sidewalk and is not excused by the exercise of reasonable care.²⁵

§ 1776. By Bicycles or Velocipedes

While riding a bicycle on a sidewalk is not of itself unlawful, such use of the sidewalks is subject to regulation and prohibition.

Riding a bicycle or velocipede on a sidewalk is not necessarily an unlawful act at common law;²⁶ nor is it necessarily a nuisance.²⁷ However, although there is some authority to the contrary,²⁸ it is generally held that a bicycle is a vehicle within a statute or ordinance forbidding the riding or driving of a vehicle on the sidewalk,²⁹ except in the necessary act of crossing.³⁰ Being a vehicle, a bicycle's proper place is on the highway or street and not on the sidewalk, unless otherwise provided by statute or ordinance;³¹ and it has been held that, even if a bicycle cannot be considered to be a vehicle, still it is unlawful to ride or drive it along a way set apart for the exclusive use of pedestrians.³² In accordance with these principles the riding of a bicycle, or similar vehicle, on the sidewalk is subject to such reasonable regulations or restrictions as may be imposed by the state legislature,³³ or by a municipality under its general power to regulate and control its streets.³⁴

In the absence of statute a municipality generally has the power to permit the riding of bicycles on the sidewalks, where such riding will not constitute a nuisance;³⁵ but it has no power to forbid bicycle riding on that part of a street devoted to the use of vehicles.³⁶ Where a statute prohibits riding a bicycle on sidewalks made of specified materials, the power of the city to permit the riding of bicycles along sidewalks is limited to sidewalks constructed of materials other than those specified in the statute.³⁷ An ordinance which prohibits the riding of bicycles on sidewalks of certain streets, except by persons who give a bond for a given amount and by policemen and lamplighters, is unreasonable and is not a lawful exercise of the police power.³⁸

d. Liability of Persons Using Street

§ 1777. In General

A person is liable for an injury to another proximately caused by his negligence or other wrongful act in the use of a street or other public way of a municipal corporation.

One whose negligence or other wrongful act in the use of a street or other public way is the proximate cause of an injury to another is liable therefor,³⁹ as where it results in a collision between the vehicle which he is driving and another vehicle,⁴⁰ or injury to a pedestrian using the street⁴¹ or sidewalk,⁴² or to a person on a streetcar,⁴³ or working on the street.⁴⁴ There can be no recovery when the accident could not have been prevented by the exercise of ordinary care, or no negligence is shown on the part of defendant,⁴⁵ or when precluded by the contributory negligence of plaintiff, as considered infra §§ 1787-1789. A defendant cannot escape liability for injury to a traveler in a municipal street resulting from his negligence by reason of faultless conduct after he saw the traveler.⁴⁶

Proximate cause. The general rule that a defendant is not liable for negligence unless his negligent act was the proximate cause of injury, considered in the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 104-105, also 45 C.J. p 901 note 27-p 905 note 36, applies to negligent acts on municipal streets.⁴⁷ In order to constitute proximate cause, imposing liability for negligence, it is not necessary that defendant should have foreseen the particular injury⁴⁸ or that defendant's negligence should have been the sole cause of plaintiff's injury,⁴⁹ and he will not be relieved from liability by what is a mere concurring, and not an independent, act of negligence,⁵⁰ or by an agency which is not in fact independent and intervening.⁵¹ However, where there was in fact an independent, intervening cause of injury, defendant is not liable.⁵² Whether or not defendant's act was the proximate⁵³ or contributing⁵⁴ cause of injury will depend on the particular circumstances of the case.

Joint liability. Where an injury is proximately caused by the concurrent wrongful acts or negligence of two persons in the use of a street, both are liable for the injury.⁵⁵

§ 1778. Mutual Rights and Duties

- a. In general
- b. Of pedestrians and others

a. In General

The rights of all persons lawfully using a highway or street in a municipal corporation, including drivers of vehicles thereon, are mutual and coordinate.

In conformity with the rule discussed in Highways §§ 233, 240, the rights of all persons lawfully using a highway or street in a municipal corporation,⁵⁶ including drivers of vehicles thereon,⁵⁷ are mutual and coordinate; and it is the duty of each to exercise his right so as not to cause injury to another.⁵⁸ Each must exercise that degree of care and vigilance which is reasonable under the circumstances⁵⁹ and commensurate with the known use that is being made of the street.⁶⁰ He is not bound to anticipate the negligence of another,⁶¹ but may assume that the other will perform the duty required of him and may act on that assumption.⁶²

Generally it is not negligence in one not to anticipate a failure of duty on the part of those who, in common with him, are making a lawful use of a public street.⁶³ It is the duty, however, of the driver of a vehicle to exercise due care to avoid the results of another's negligence,⁶⁴ and whether he has taken the proper course in a particular situation depends on all the circumstances of the case.⁶⁵

In the absence of statute or ordinance providing otherwise, pedestrians and others lawfully using the streets of municipal corporations have equal rights therein and are mutually bound to exercise due care to avoid injury. Pedestrians have a preferential right in the use of sidewalks.

In conformity with the rule discussed in Highways §§ 233, 240, foot passengers and drivers of vehicles, in the absence of statute or ordinance providing otherwise, have equal rights on the streets of municipal corporations and both are bound to exercise commensurate care to avoid injury,⁶⁶ and, in the absence of statute or ordinance relative thereto, as discussed infra § 1789, the rule applies at public crossings.⁶⁷

The driver of a vehicle within an intersection, or crossing an intersection, must proceed with regard to the rights of pedestrians crossing the street, particularly where the pedestrian has the right of way, whether his right is preferential or absolute.⁶⁸ The pedestrian, however, should carefully observe traffic conditions before trying to cross a street at a busy intersection,⁶⁹ and before attempting to cross a street should keep in mind and govern his actions in accordance with the right of the operator of a vehicle, as considered infra § 1779 c (1), to proceed across it in the face of a red light or stop signal that bars travel in the direction in which he is going.⁷⁰ Under an ordinance giving to pedestrians the right of way at street intersections, pedestrians are not required to stop and yield the right of way as a matter of right to drivers of vehicles.⁷¹ The law, even though it gives precedence at intersections to pedestrians, does not permit them to loiter on or obstruct crossings, but merely gives them the right of reasonable opportunity to pass first.⁷² An ordinance giving pedestrians the right of way at street intersections and crossings has been held not applicable at crossings where traffic is congested.⁷³ In some jurisdictions the driver of a vehicle is required to exercise the greatest care so as not to injure pedestrians at street crossings.⁷⁴ The operator of a vehicle is entitled to assume that traffic signals are understood and will be observed by pedestrians.⁷⁵

Use of sidewalk. Pedestrians on a lane or walk used by foot travelers, such as a sidewalk, have the right to come and go in any direction as they see fit

§ 1779. Law of the Road

- a. In general
- b. Duty to keep to right
- c. At intersections
- d. Overtaking and passing
- e. Particular vehicles

a. In General

The law of the road, in the absence of statute, ordinance, or other regulation modifying, restricting, or superseding it, applies to travel on the streets of a municipal corporation.

The law of the road or general custom regulating the mode of travel on public highways, considered in Highways §§ 236-239, applies, in the absence of statute, ordinance, or other regulation modifying, restricting, or superseding it, to travel on the streets of a municipal corporation.⁸⁰ Traffic rules generally, whether based on the law of the road or on ordinance or statute, are not inflexible or exclusive rules, but are relative.⁸¹ They are subject to the common-law doctrine that the rights thus given must be so used as not to injure another,⁸² and emergencies may arise where, in order to escape from danger to one's self or to prevent injury to others, it is not only excusable, but proper, temporarily to violate the general rule.⁸³ The rules for vehicular travel on streets do not apply to pedestrians.⁸⁴

Turning or changing course. Under statutes so providing, the operator of a vehicle is required to give a plainly visible or audible sign of his intention to turn or change the course of his vehicle before doing so when the movement or operation of other vehicles may reasonably be affected thereby,⁸⁶ but he may turn or change the course of his vehicle without giving such signal if he first ascertains that there is sufficient space for such movement to be made in safety and that it will not reasonably affect the movement or operation of other vehicles.⁸⁷ Such a statute has been said to be not violated by the failure of the operator of a vehicle, who has given the required signal, to ascertain before making the movement whether or not there is sufficient space to make it in safety and whether or not it will reasonably affect the movement or operation of other vehicles.⁸⁸

b. Duty to Keep to Right

The law of the road requires vehicles on municipal streets to keep to the right.

The law of the road requires vehicles on municipal streets to keep to the right.⁸⁹ The driver of a vehicle has the right, however, in the absence of statute or ordinance to the contrary, to drive on any part of the street,⁹⁰ if there is no travel at that time

Subject to pedestrian's superior right on that part of the way,⁹¹ or if the travel is not so heavy as to make it dangerous to do so,⁹² or as long as it does not interfere with the right of other travelers.⁹³ Hence, it is not of itself, or as a matter of law, unlawful or negligence to drive a vehicle along the left-hand or wrong side of a street⁹⁴ or in the middle of a street.⁹⁵ Nevertheless, where the operator of a vehicle uses the left-hand or wrong side of the street, his rights are inferior to those of travelers proceeding in the opposite direction,⁹⁶ and he may not complain of the conduct of others to the same extent as though he were on the proper side.⁹⁷ A rule or regulation requiring vehicles to keep to the right does not prohibit the use of the left-hand side of the street under all circumstances.⁹⁸

Near right-hand curb. Under some statutes or ordinances a vehicle is required to keep as near the right-hand curb as possible.⁹⁹ Such a requirement, however, does not require a vehicle to be driven outside the paved center half of a street.¹

To what vehicles or situations applicable. The rule of keeping to the right applies to motor vehicles, considered in Motor Vehicles § 275, and to bicycles as well as other vehicles,² including horse-drawn vehicles;³ and it has been held to apply not only to vehicles passing in opposite directions, but to vehicles coming together in such a manner that there would be an actual collision or an apparent danger of one if they should pursue their courses without change of direction.⁴ It applies, however, only to vehicles in motion and not those stopping on the street for business;⁵ and, therefore, in the absence of a regulation to the contrary, it does not apply to a vehicle standing at the left-hand curb,⁶ such as a truck to discharge its load,⁷ or a coach and buggy to allow passengers to alight;⁸ nor does it apply to vehicles on private property.⁹

On one-way street. The rule requiring vehicles to keep to the right of the center does not apply to a one-way street,¹⁰ and hence does not apply to a circular roadway on which vehicles are required, by ordinance, to drive to the right on entering.¹¹ Where an operator of a vehicle lawfully uses a one way drive against traffic he must proceed with more than ordinary care, as traveling in that direction is not to be anticipated by other users.¹² Under statutes so providing, the violation of an ordinance limiting traffic to one way does not render the operator of the vehicle or any occupant a trespasser on such way.¹³

Street divided by parkway. A park bounded on each of its sides by a separate street and not within the boundaries or a part of any one of them is not a "parkway" within a regulation requiring vehicles to keep to the right on streets or boulevards divided longitudinally by a "parkway."¹⁴

traveled portion of the street;¹⁵ and, even though a statute declaratory of this duty to turn to the right applies only to highways other than streets, the same rule constitutes a custom which, as part of the common law, is applicable to streets.¹⁶ The central line of the roadway within such a rule or regulation means the line that bisects the middle line of the usable road, and is not necessarily the middle line of a paved or dedicated street,¹⁷ and where, because of obstructions, a part thereof is made impassable, the rule or regulation refers to the remaining passable way.¹⁸

Crossing street. The right-hand rule is inapplicable to vehicles crossing from one side of a street to the other.¹⁹

Justification or excuse for driving on wrong side. A driver may under compulsion of circumstances turn left without violating the law of the road,²⁰ as where this is necessary to avoid an obstruction on the right-hand side,²¹ especially under a regulation, declaratory of the common-law rule, which provides that it shall not apply to a case where it is impracticable, from the nature of the ground, for the driver to turn to the right of the beaten track.²²

c. At Intersections

In the absence of statute or ordinance providing otherwise, the rights of vehicles which approach each other at intersections of streets are equal, and the one which first reaches the intersection has the right of way.

Ordinarily when two vehicles approach each other at intersections of streets, the rights of each are equal.²³ However, in the absence of some regulation to the contrary, and under statutes and ordinances so providing, the one first reaching the crossing has the right of way and it is the duty of the other to allow the first vehicle reasonable opportunity to pass,²⁴ and this rule has been applied to the operator of a vehicle and a pedestrian.²⁵ On the other hand, even though a preference is given to the vehicle nearest the intersection, it does not prevent the vehicle farthest from the intersection from proceeding, if possible, with the exercise of reasonable care.²⁶ The driver of a vehicle is not required to wait until all observable traffic has cleared an intersection before venturing into it;²⁷ nor is he bound to keep his eyes fixed in one direction and keep a known approaching vehicle under constant observation to the exclusion of exercising care for dangers which may arise from other directions.²⁸

Right of way governed by direction of travel. A statute providing that the driver of a vehicle approaching an intersection shall grant the right of way to a vehicle approaching from a particular direction merely adds a factor to common-law rules, whereby negligence may be measured between conflicting claimants exercising a common right.²⁹ Such a statute or an ordinance of like tenor must be given a reasonable and practicable application,³⁰ and the right of way conferred is relative,³¹ and applies only where vehicles approach an intersection

It has been held that the law of the road, as found in a statute providing for the recovery of a forfeit for the benefit of the road fund on the failure of the driver of a vehicle to pass to the right when meeting another vehicle, applies only to highways, and not to streets in municipalities.—Decatur v. Duty not absolute

The primary, not the absolute, duty of avoiding an accident at an intersection rests on driver on the left, which duty he must perform with reasonable regard to maintenance of

at approximately the same time.³² A driver lacking the right of way may nevertheless proceed if no one is approaching along the intersecting street within a distance reasonably indicating danger of collision.³³

Effect of right of way on degree of care required. While a statute or ordinance giving the right of way to a particular vehicle or to vehicles approaching from a particular direction may affect the quantum of care to be exercised by each driver,³⁴ it does not confer a monopoly of way ad libitum on a person so approaching, regardless of existing conditions and the distance from the intersecting street.³⁵ It does not mean that a vehicle not having the right of way must at its peril avoid collision with a vehicle having the right of way, irrespective of care or negligence of either driver,³⁶ nor does such "right of way" relieve the operators of favored vehicles from the exercise of due care not to injure another at such place.³⁷

Traffic signal or traffic officer's signal. Traffic signal devices and traffic officers controlling traffic at street intersections are for the safety and protection of those who use the streets and should be obeyed.⁴⁰ The superior right of way at street intersections belongs to that vehicle or pedestrian whose course is favored by the traffic officer or signal;⁴¹ neither is allowed to enter an intersection on the wrong signal,⁴² and where a traveler who has entered an intersection on a proper or green signal has not cleared the crossing at the time the signal changes it is his right and duty to clear it thereafter and he is not negligent in so doing.⁴³

A "go" signal by a traffic officer or signal device is not a command to go, but a qualified permission, that is, a permission to proceed lawfully and carefully in the direction indicated.⁴⁴ The right of way conferred is subject to the rights of those already in the intersection;⁴⁵ it confers no authority on the one who receives the signal to proceed across the intersection regardless of other persons or vehicles which may already be within it.⁴⁶ It does not give one the right to proceed without regard to circumstances, conditions, or consequences; but, notwithstanding such right, one must exercise due care to prevent injury to himself and others.⁴⁷ The fact that the red light behind the red or stop sign of a traffic signal device at a street intersection is dead is not an invitation to cross or proceed.⁴⁸

A street is not a boulevard, within the meaning of a statute relating to the right of way at the intersection of streets of unequal character, unless so designated by ordinance.⁵⁰

Turning at intersection. Under a statute requiring vehicles to keep to the right of the center of an intersection, and in turning to the left, to run beyond the center, a vehicle intending to turn must approach the intersection on the proper side of the street.⁵¹ Under a statute or ordinance so providing, a vehicle turning from its course at a street intersection must yield the right of way to other vehicles and pedestrians lawfully within the intersection.⁵²

What constitutes an intersection. Intersecting streets within the meaning of statutes, ordinance, or regulations respecting the law of the road include all intersecting ways, whether they do or do not cross each other,⁵³ dead-end streets meeting a through street at right angles,⁵⁴ and three streets meeting at the same point.⁵⁵ The "point of intersection" is the space common to the crossing streets,⁵⁶ and not necessarily the point at which the paths of two approaching vehicles would cross;⁵⁷ and the "center of intersection" is the point at which the center lines of the intersecting streets cross.⁵⁸ A crosswalk or crossing for pedestrians at an intersection generally is the space within the confines of that portion of the street or highway which would be embraced within the boundaries of the lines of the sidewalk of the street intersecting the other highway at a right angle, if continued across the highway.⁵⁹

The law of the road requires a vehicle overtaking and passing another on municipal streets to pass to the left of the overtaken vehicle, and the driver of the vehicle ahead to keep far enough to the right to permit passing on his left, or to turn to his right when he receives a warning from a vehicle approaching from his rear.

The law of the road requires a vehicle overtaking and passing another on municipal streets to pass to the left of the overtaken vehicle,⁶⁰ and the driver of the vehicle ahead to keep far enough to the right to permit passing on his left,⁶¹ or to turn to his right when he receives a warning from a vehicle approaching from his rear;⁶² and the latter may properly assume that anyone overtaking him will pass to his left.⁶³ The rule, however, is not absolute,⁶⁴ although a divergence imposes the duty to exercise greater care,⁶⁵ and it is neither unlawful or negligent to turn to the right of a vehicle ahead in order to avoid danger,⁶⁶ or, in the absence of contrary statute or ordinance, to pass to the right where for any reason there is insufficient space to permit passage to the left,⁶⁷ or to overtake and pass a vehicle on the right, instead of the left, side on approaching an intersection where a traffic signal and markings on the highway divide it into distinct traffic lanes for travel in the same direction.⁶⁸ A regulation requiring the overtaking vehicle to pass to the left is subject to the conditions existing on the street and does not excuse the driver from ex-

Statute respecting right of way at traffic controlled intersections has been construed to apply not only to those already in intersection when signal is first shown but to all lawfully within intersection during entire time for which signal is exhibited so that vehicle making left turn must wait until those meeting it have passed and must not cross in front of approaching traffic, either vehicular or pedestrian, in such a way as to interfere with its lawful progress.—Caryl, to Use of Merchants Mut. exercising care in ascertaining whether the passing can be done with safety to those on the left side of the street;⁶⁹ and some regulations expressly require that the passing shall not be made unless there is a clear way for a given distance ahead on that side.⁷⁰

A traffic regulation statute applicable to vehicles overtaking and passing others is not intended to provide an exclusively hard-and-fast rule applicable to all hazards and to all situations, regardless of actual conditions.⁷¹ A statute prohibiting the passing of vehicles from the rear while crossing intersections is inapplicable to an unintentional movement because of the sudden stop of the vehicle passed.⁷² Although it is the duty of the driver of a vehicle to pass to the left of another going in the same direction, a driver is not excused in doing so when the consequence of so acting will be the violation of another statute.⁷³

In the absence of a statute or ordinance providing otherwise, the law of the road applies equally to all vehicles on municipal streets. The drivers of vehicles engaged in a public service, although entitled to the right of way over ordinary vehicles, are required to use reasonable care in the exercise of their special privileges.

In the absence of a statute or ordinance providing otherwise, the law of the road applies equally to all vehicles on municipal streets,⁷⁴ and hence, as discussed in Motor Vehicles §§ 379-381, cyclists and drivers of horse-drawn vehicles, in the absence of statute or ordinance providing otherwise, have equal rights as to such matters with motorists. A statute relating to automobiles is inapplicable to other vehicles.⁷⁵ The right-hand rule does not apply to vehicles running on fixed tracks.⁷⁶ However, in order to secure the protection of an ordinance providing, as an exception of the law of the road, that any person driving on any street railroad track, in the direction that the cars are running, shall have the right of way, it must appear that at the time of the accident the one claiming the right of way was following a car.⁷⁷

Vehicles having special privileges. Ordinarily drivers of vehicles engaged in a public service have the right of way over ordinary vehicles in municipal streets, as discussed supra § 1767. Drivers of such vehicles, however, must use reasonable care in the exercise of their special privileges,⁷⁸ and this rule of care has been applied to ambulances,⁷⁹ fire department vehicles,⁸⁰ and police patrols.⁸¹ The right of way given by an ordinance to a police patrol is not restricted to a right of way over vehicles traveling in the same direction by an ordinance providing that all vehicles should be driven to the right of the center of the street.⁸² A statute providing that a salvage corps while on duty shall be subordinate to, and under the control of, the fire department does not give the vehicles of the latter the right of way over the former while being driven to a fire.⁸³ It has been held that, since the maintenance of a fire department is for a wholly public purpose, the right of way given to it by statute is paramount to, and unaffected by, that granted to a fire insurance patrol by a statute providing that the patrol should have the same right of way while going to a fire as the fire department, but that nothing in the act should be construed to affect the authority of the fire department.⁸⁴ way within a municipal corporation to exercise due or reasonable care to avoid injury to others.

Funeral procession. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, funeral processions do not have the right of way to proceed as a single unit.⁸⁵

In conformity with the rules applicable in the case of highways generally, considered in Highways § 240, it is the duty, under all circumstances,⁸⁶ of persons using a street or other public way within a municipal corporation,⁸⁷ including pedestrians,⁸⁸ to exercise due care, or ordinary or reasonable care, to avoid injury to others, particularly to those who are lawfully therein.⁸⁹ The amount of care required is dependent on the existing circumstances and conditions,⁹⁰ and is that which the circumstances justly demand.⁹¹ One is required to use care to avoid injury to another as far as it may be reasonably foreseen as something likely to happen if care is not taken;⁹² he is bound to anticipate and guard against that which usually happens, but is not required to anticipate or guard against that which is unusual or unlikely to happen.⁹³

The duty to use due care applies at crossings,⁹⁴

and in passing standing vehicles,⁹⁵ in failing to keep a lookout,⁹⁶ in failing to keep his vehicle under control,⁹⁷ in failing to keep to the right,⁹⁸ in failing to give warning of dangers,⁹⁹ in driving on or across sidewalks,¹ in loading vehicles,² in moving a house along the street,³ in throwing objects from vehicles,⁴ or in avoiding injury to animals.⁵

Care as to equipment. One who drives or causes his servant to drive a horse-drawn vehicle on a public street has the duty to exercise due care to have and to keep the whole outfit in such road-worthy condition as not to cause injury to others.⁶

at an ordinary trot,⁸ or even at a lively trot,⁹ is not negligence per se, and one so driving is not so limited to any particular rate of speed, but is bound simply to use proper care not to injure other persons lawfully on the street.¹⁰ An ordinance fixing the maximum speed an hour is not a license to go at that speed at all times and places,¹¹ and drivers of vehicles may be negligent in driving at a certain rate of speed, although not exceeding the speed limit fixed by statute or ordinance.¹²

Vehicles given special privileges as to right of way, as considered supra § 1767, are nevertheless bound to avoid a speed dangerous under the circumstances.¹³

At street intersections drivers must keep the speed of their vehicles within limits permitting a stop on the shortest notice,¹⁴ and this is true even though they have the right of way.¹⁵

§ 1782. — Stopping and Standing

It is not unlawful or negligent for a driver who exercises reasonable precautions to stop his vehicle or leave it standing in a municipal street.

Within reasonable limitations it is not unlawful or negligent for a driver to stop his vehicle¹⁶ or leave it standing¹⁷ in municipal streets. A statute providing that it shall be unlawful to leave any vehicle standing on the main traveled portion of any highway has been construed as inapplicable to city streets¹⁸ on the ground that, if applicable thereto, all parking on streets would be unlawful and the local authorities would be deprived of necessary power to permit parking under proper regulation.¹⁹ However, if a driver so parks his vehicle that a portion thereof²⁰ or a dangerous and unguarded part of its load²¹ obstructs traffic and results in injury to others, he will be held liable for negligence.

Signal of intention to stop vehicle. Under statutes so providing, the operator of a vehicle is required to give a plainly visible or audible sign of his intention to stop his vehicle before doing so when the movement or operation of other vehicles may reasonably be affected thereby,²² but he may stop his vehicle without giving such signal if he first ascertains that there is sufficient space for him to stop in safety and it will not reasonably affect the movement or operation of other vehicles.²³ In order to establish negligence under such a statute it must appear that the operator of a vehicle attempted to stop it without signaling his intention to do so and that there was not sufficient space to stop it in safety or that to stop it would reasonably affect the movement or operation of other vehicles,²⁴ but the operator of a vehicle who has signaled his intention to stop does not violate the statute by failing to ascertain before stopping whether or not there is sufficient space to stop in safety and whether or not it will reasonably affect the movement or operation of other vehicles.²⁵

§ 1783. — Management and Control of Horses and Other Animals

- a. In general
- b. Leaving animal unhitched and unattended
- c. Vicious or dangerous character of animal

a. In General

One who has the management and control of horses or other animals on municipal streets has the duty to exercise ordinary or reasonable care; and he is liable for damages caused by the animal proximately resulting from his negligence in its management and control, but he is not liable for damages caused without negligence on his part.

One driving²⁶ or leading²⁷ an animal along municipal streets must use ordinary or reasonable care, such as the circumstances require;²⁸ and he is liable for any injury caused by the animal proximately resulting from his negligence in its management and control,²⁹ even though the animal is not vicious.³⁰ On the other hand, a person driving or leading animals through a street is not absolutely bound to keep them under control,³¹ and is not liable for damages caused by them without negligence on his part.³²

The mere fact of a runaway does not of itself establish negligence by the driver or owner,³³ particularly where the team or horse is accompanied by a driver;³⁴ but the unexplained presence on a street of a team of runaway horses, unattended by any person, makes a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the owner or driver.³⁵ A person may not be held liable for damages arising from a runaway which occurred without negligence on his part,³⁶ as where the runaway horse or team was frightened by a third person,³⁷ or was properly

Driving without reins

In New York

(1) The rule of the text has been followed in a number of cases.—Unger v. Forty-Second Street & Grand Street Ferry Railroad Co., 51 N.Y. 497—Setzkorn v. City of Buffalo, 219 N.Y.S. 351, 219 App.Div. 416—Hackett v. Lenox Sand & Gravel Co., 175 N.Y.S. 361, 187 App.Div. 211—Hollaran v. New York, 153 N.Y.S. 447, 168 App.Div. 469—Kelly v. Kallfelz, 50 N.Y.S. 928, 22 Misc. 602—Doherty v. Sweetser, 81 N.Y.S. 649, 82 Hun 556.

(2) There is authority to the contrary, however, and the authority of Unger v. Forty-Second Street & Grand Street Ferry Railroad Co., 51 N.Y. 497, has been denied on the ground that the statement of the rule therein was obiter.—Gottwald v. Bernheimer, 6 Daly 215.

(3) However, in a subsequent case which followed the rule of the text it was stated that in the case of Gottwald v. Bernheimer, supra, defendant's explanation that he had securely tied the horse with a strap which it had thereafter broken was sufficient to show that he was not negligent.—Rice v. Von Der Lieth, supra.

fastened, took fright, broke his fastening, and ran away.³⁸

Mistake in emergency. Where a driver of runaway horses is confronted with a sudden emergency requiring instant selection of one of two courses of action, and through error of judgment selects the wrong course to the injury of another, he will be held guilty of negligence if the runaway was his fault,³⁹ but not if the runaway happened without his fault.⁴⁰

b. Leaving Animal Unhitched and Unattended

One who leaves a horse or team unhitched and unattended on municipal streets takes the risk of what it may do and will be liable for injuries resulting therefrom where the conditions are such as to make such conduct negligent.

One who leaves a horse unhitched and unattended on municipal streets takes the risk of what the horse may do.⁴¹ Although the mere fact that a horse that is unhitched and unattended runs away does not establish negligence,⁴² it may constitute such negligence as will make the owner or driver liable for injuries resulting from a runaway to leave a horse or other animal unhitched and unattended on municipal streets,⁴³ or to leave it improperly or insufficiently hitched,⁴⁴ or attended only by one incapable of controlling the animal,⁴⁵ and there is authority which holds that to leave a horse or team unhitched and unattended is undoubted negligence,⁴⁶ or negligence if not explained,⁴⁷ or at least prima facie negligence.⁴⁸ These rules are applicable without regard to viciousness or scienter,⁴⁹ even though the animal is gentle,⁵⁰ and the rules are particularly applicable where the animal is of a nervous or spirited character.⁵¹

It is not necessarily negligence to leave a horse or similar animal standing on municipal streets unhitched,⁵² or hitched or weighted but unattended,⁵³ and there is no absolute rule of law requiring one who has a horse in a street to tie it or to hold it by the reins, if there is a person immediately at hand to look after it.⁵⁴ It may be negligence to leave a horse unfastened which is restless and high-strung, although the owner is watching it from a short distance.⁵⁵ Compliance with city regulations respecting the period a horse may be left unattended does not exempt the driver from the duty of exercising ordinary diligence under existing circumstances.⁵⁶

Ordinances forbidding the running at large of animals on the streets are intended to prevent injury to persons.⁵⁷

Proximate cause. Leaving a horse or team in the street unhitched or unattended imposes no liability for injuries not proximately due to such act.⁵⁸ However, defendant is not relieved from liability for injuries resulting from such an act by the fact that the actual occurrence must have seemed improbable,⁵⁹ or by what is a mere concurring, and not an independent and intervening, act of negligence,⁶⁰ as where horses left unhitched and unattended are caused to run away by a person or agency other than defendant, but no runaway or injury therefrom would have occurred had defendant properly hitched or attended the horses.⁶¹

c. Vicious or Dangerous Character of Animal

One who has the management and control of horses or other animals on municipal streets is liable for injuries primarily resulting from their vicious or dangerous character of which he had knowledge.

In general a person who puts a dangerous animal on the streets or public ways of a municipality does so at his peril.⁶² Hence, where damage results primarily from the vicious or unsafe character of the animal, defendant will ordinarily be held liable for permitting it on municipal streets when he knew of its dangerous character,⁶³ but not where he was excusably ignorant thereof.⁶⁴ The viciousness of the animal has been held of no consequence, however, in an action for injuries caused by an animal running at large on the city streets in violation of an ordinance.⁶⁵

Scienter. The knowledge of the owner or person in charge of a horse or other animal of his vicious or unruly habits is a circumstance to be considered in determining whether or not due care was exercised in its management and control.⁶⁶ It has been held necessary to prove the scienter in order to render the owner of a domestic animal liable for its vicious acts committed in a city street while it is being driven or ridden,⁶⁷ or led,⁶⁸ or while it is standing in charge of an attendant,⁶⁹ or is temporarily left unattended.⁷⁰ The rule has been held to be uninfluenced by an ordinance making it a misdemeanor to leave a horse or other animal unfastened and unattended on the street;⁷¹ but other authority has held it unnecessary to prove scienter in an action for injury caused by being bitten by a dog where the action is based on defendant's violation of a municipal ordinance against allowing a dog to run unmuzzled on the city streets and not on the common-law action for negligence.⁷² Scienter need not be shown where the liability is based on the negligence of the driver or owner and not the vicious character of the animal.⁷³

ered supra § 1780, one of the circumstances to be considered is the mental and physical capacity of the particular person encountered.⁷⁴ Thus the operators of vehicles on the public streets are required to be especially careful where blind or infirm persons are concerned.⁷⁵ This extraordinary duty is placed on such operators, however, only when such persons are seen, or where there is reason to anticipate their presence;⁷⁶ and, in the absence of knowledge or circumstances indicating otherwise, the operator of a vehicle has a right to presume that others in or near the streets are in the full possession of their faculties and will exercise their senses to avoid an accident.⁷⁷

Intoxicated persons. The driver of a vehicle must consider the incapacity of an intoxicated person when his intoxicated condition is or should be known to the driver,⁷⁸ and the law exacts a greater degree of caution with respect to such persons.⁷⁹

b. Children

Children on municipal streets are not trespassers, and drivers of vehicles are bound to anticipate their presence and, in view of their characteristic heedlessness and nonappreciation of danger, to exercise the degree of care required of a reasonably prudent man under the circumstances.

A child on a municipal street is not a trespasser,⁸⁰ even though he is merely playing thereon.⁸¹ With respect to children on municipal streets a driver must exercise care commensurate with the exigencies of the situation,⁸² and the degree of care required is that of a reasonably prudent man under similar circumstances.⁸³ The driver is generally held to be bound to anticipate the presence of children in the streets and to exercise reasonable diligence to avoid injuring them.⁸⁴ He must bear in mind the characteristics of young children with respect to nonappreciation of danger,⁸⁵ and he must anticipate childish heedlessness on their part and has no right to assume that they will exercise the discretion needed to protect them from the dangers of traffic.⁸⁶ Where children are concerned he must be especially careful;⁸⁷ he must exercise extreme care,⁸⁸ or more than the ordinary caution⁸⁹ required in the case of adults.⁹⁰ What would be but ordinary negligence on the part of the driver of a vehicle with respect to a grown pedestrian may be gross negligence with respect to a child.⁹¹

On the other hand, drivers are not insurers against accidents to children.⁹² A driver will not be liable where the injury occurs without his fault,⁹³ as where he is reasonably ignorant of the dangerous proximity of children when starting the vehicle,⁹⁴ or when approaching a place where children are coasting,⁹⁵ or where he neither knew, nor should have known, of the child's presence or attempt to board his vehicle,⁹⁶ or attempt to reach

under it for a toy which had fallen under it,⁹⁷ or where a child darts out or runs into the street from a place of safety and he is not able by the use of prudence and skill, after being confronted with the peril, to evade the emergency created by the child.⁹⁸

The operator of a vehicle who has an infant signal traffic to enable him to back into a street owes a duty to the infant to see that he is not placed in a perilous position while performing such service,⁹⁹ and the driver of an approaching vehicle, while not bound to obey such signals, is in duty bound so to drive as not to place the infant in an apparent position of danger.¹

The fact that a street was closed to traffic may be considered on the issue of defendant's negligence in operating a steam roller injuring a child.²

The proximity of school grounds imposes on a driver a greater degree of caution than ordinary circumstances would require.³

§ 1785. — Frightening Animals

One who negligently frightens animals on a municipal street is liable for the resultant injury.

In accordance with the rules relating to highways generally, considered in Highways § 243, one who frightens horses is liable for resultant injury if he acted negligently,⁴ as by making an unnecessary noise calculated to frighten near-by horses;⁵ and he is not relieved from liability by the act of another in also frightening the animal, where such other person's act is a mere concurring, and not an independent and intervening, act of negligence.⁶ He is not liable, however, if he inadvertently frightened the horses without negligence,⁷ or if his frightening of the animal was not the proximate cause of the injury.⁸

§ 1786. — Violation of Statute or Ordinance

A person is generally liable for injuries proximately caused by his violation of a statute or ordinance regulating the use of municipal streets or highways.

In conformity with the general rules, discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 19, also 45 C.J. p 714 note 91—p 732 note 36, and subject to the limitations and qualifications thereon recognized in the particular jurisdiction, negligence of defendant may be predicated on, or evidenced by, his violation of a statute or ordinance.⁹ Although there is some authority to the contrary,¹⁰ violations of traffic regulations of municipal corporations have been held to constitute negligence per se.¹¹ Thus in various instances it has been held that actionable negligence

Cumulative effect

Ordinances and statutes imposing specific duties with respect to use of streets and highways are cumulative and do not destroy the common-law rules as to diligence and negligence.—Williams v. Grier, 26 S.E.2d 698, 198 Ga. 327, conformed to 27 S.E.2d 352, 70 Ga.App. 75.

Primary purpose of safety ordinance does not necessarily limit its scope on issue of negligence.—Callahan v. Terminal Cab Corporation, 181 N.E. 67, 259 N.Y. 112.

Strictness of compliance required

(1) Traffic regulations and ordinances designed to protect human life and property should be literally observed, but where an ordinance does not have such an end in view the same strictness of enforcement is not required.—McGehee v. Ashley, 137 So. 80, 18 La.App. 393.

may be predicated on defendant's violation of ordinances or statutes with reference to the speed of travel,¹² the giving of signals,¹³ vehicles keeping as near the right-hand curb as possible,¹⁴ entering or crossing a designated street without stopping,¹⁵ the right of way at intersections,¹⁶ turning at intersections,¹⁷ turning or crossing between intersections,¹⁸ the failure to display a red flag at the rear end of a load projecting beyond the rear of the vehicle,¹⁹ the driving of a vehicle so loaded as to obstruct the driver's view,²⁰ parking,²¹ safety zone ordinances,²² the leading of animals on sidewalks,²³ riding a bicycle on a sidewalk,²⁴ the leaving of animals unhitched and unguarded,²⁵ or requiring particular equipment of bicycles.²⁶

In order to avail himself of a violation of an ordinance or statute, plaintiff must be within the protection of the ordinance.²⁷ The fact that, at the time of the accident, defendant was violating a statute or ordinance does not preclude a finding that plaintiff's own negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.²⁸ One who has participated in the illegal use of a street cannot recover as for an illegal act, regardless of negligence and contributory negligence.²⁹

Proximate cause. The violation of a statute or ordinance regulating the use of streets is not in itself sufficient to make one using them in violation thereof liable, but it must appear that such violation was the proximate cause of the injury,³⁰ and this rule applies even where the violation of an ordinance constitutes negligence per se.³¹

§ 1787. Contributory Negligence

As a general rule, contributory negligence of the plaintiff will preclude his right to recover for injuries sustained while on a municipal street.

Except in jurisdictions where the doctrine of comparative negligence is in force, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 169-173, also 45 C.J. p 1037 note 97-p 1043 note 62, the contributory negligence of plaintiff will preclude his right to recovery,³² unless defendant may be held liable under the doctrine of the last clear chance³³ which has been held applicable notwithstanding the continuing negligence of plaintiff.³⁴

§ 1788. — What Constitutes

- a. In general
- b. Duty to discover danger
- c. Reliance on care of person causing injury
- d. Acts in emergencies
- e. As affected by law of the road
- f. Violation of statute or ordinance

a. In General

The failure of a plaintiff injured while on a municipal street to use ordinary and reasonable care for his own safety constitutes contributory negligence.

Every person using the streets is required to use ordinary care for his own safety and failure to do so constitutes contributory negligence.³⁵ Where plaintiff's negligence constitutes the proximate cause of the injury, there can be no recovery;³⁶ but, in order for plaintiff's negligence to have this effect, it must have been a proximate cause of the injury,³⁷ and, if it was not a proximate cause of the injury, there is no contributory negligence barring recovery.³⁸

b. Duty to Discover Danger

The failure of a person in a municipal street to use his senses and intelligence to discover and avoid an obvious danger constitutes contributory negligence.

Violation of statute or ordinance

This rule has been applied where the action was founded on defendant's violation of a statute or ordinance.—Young v. Honolulu Construction & Draying Co., 34 Hawaii 426—44 C.J. p 1063 note 18.

39. Conn.—Radwick v. Goldstein, 98 A. 583, 90 Conn. 701.

In general see the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 120, 152, also 45 C.J. p 947 note 79—p 949 note 91, p 1017 notes 80—84.

Of persons encountering motor vehicles see Motor Vehicles § 458.

In the exercise of due care a person using municipal streets is required to use his senses and intelligence to observe and discover impending danger,³⁹ and his failure to discover and avoid an obvious danger constitutes contributory negligence,⁴⁰ as where he steps, without looking or listening, from behind one object in the street in front of another object, which injures him,⁴¹ or drives into an obstruction that might easily have been seen,⁴² or where he crosses an intersecting street without keeping a lookout for approaching vehicles.⁴³ The failure, however, to observe⁴⁴ or anticipate⁴⁵ impending danger is not necessarily negligence, as where the danger is sudden and not normally to be expected.⁴⁶

c. Reliance on Care of Person Causing Injury

Every person on a municipal street has the right to assume, in the absence of notice or knowledge to the contrary, that others will use due care to avoid injuring him, but such right will not excuse his failure to exercise ordinary care for his own safety.

Under the rule that the rights of all persons using municipal streets are reciprocal, as discussed supra § 1778, every person on the street has the right to assume, in the absence of notice or knowledge to the contrary, that others will use due care to avoid injuring him,⁴⁷ and that they will not expose him to danger by breach of a statutory or common-law duty.⁴⁸ Likewise, a person is not bound to anticipate that others will violate a municipal ordinance or statute.⁴⁹ The right to rely on care by others, however, does not excuse plaintiff for failure to exercise the ordinary care for his own safety demanded by the circumstances,⁵⁰ and, even though a traveler on a municipal street has the right of way, he must exercise reasonable care for his own safety.⁵¹ Any right a traveler may have to indulge in a presumption that the streets of the municipality are safe has no application where the danger is known and obvious.⁵²

A person on a street who is confronted by an emergency requiring instant action is not necessarily negligent if he takes the wrong course.

One confronted by an emergency requiring instant action is not ordinarily held negligent for taking the wrong course in his effort to escape injury on the street.⁵³ One attempting to stop a runaway is not guilty of contributory negligence if he acted to save life⁵⁴ in imminent peril,⁵⁵ or if there were people about in the street who might be harmed by the runaway,⁵⁶ especially where he was under a duty to do so.⁵⁷ Moreover, the fact that plaintiff remained on the street at the time of a runaway in order to guard his own team and the occupants of his vehicle does not conclusively establish contributory negligence on his part.⁵⁸

e. As Affected by Law of the Road

A traveler on a street may properly assume that drivers of vehicles will obey the law of the road, but the mere fact that a plaintiff violated the law of the road does not of itself necessarily constitute contributory negligence.

A driver may properly assume that an approaching vehicle will obey the right-hand rule,⁵⁹ and one on a vehicle being overtaken may assume that the overtaking vehicle will pass to the left⁶⁰ sufficiently to clear it.⁶¹ Merely driving on the wrong side of the road is not necessarily contributory negligence,⁶² and violation of an ordinance relative to the right of way at intersections is not of itself contributory negligence,⁶³ although failure to give defendant his right of way at an intersection may under the circumstances constitute contributory negligence.⁶⁴

f. Violation of Statute or Ordinance

The violation of a statute or ordinance by a plaintiff injured while on a municipal street may constitute contributory negligence if it was a proximate cause of his injury.

The general rule that plaintiff's contributory negligence may be predicated on his violation of a statute or ordinance, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 127, also 45 C.J. p 969 note 56—p 972 note 75, is applicable to persons injured on municipal streets while violating statutes or ordinances⁶⁵ relative to bicycling, as discussed infra § 1789 b, coast-

Proximate cause. In accordance with the general rule, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 127, also 45 C.J. p 970 note 68—p 971 note 69, the fact that one is injured while violating a statute or ordinance regulating the use of streets does not defeat his right to recovery unless his unlawful act was a contributing cause to the injury,⁷⁶ as in the case of acts not a contributing cause of injury but constituting a violation of ordinances relative to lighting construction work,⁷⁷ vehicles,⁷⁸ speed of travel,⁷⁹ right of way,⁸⁰ one-way streets,⁸¹ parking,⁸² or maintaining obstructions on the sidewalk.⁸³

will not excuse former negligence.⁸⁵ Recovery will not be denied, however, where the acts of plaintiff fell short of contributory negligence.⁸⁶

b. Cyclists

Cyclists injured while using the streets cannot recover if their contributory negligence was a proximate cause of the injury.

The rule that one guilty of contributory negligence cannot recover for injuries received while using the streets, discussed supra § 1787, applies to bicyclists⁸⁷ and motorcyclists, as discussed in Motor Vehicles § 463, and they must exercise ordinary care in order to avoid collision with other vehicles.⁸⁸ The violation of a statute or ordinance by a cyclist constitutes contributory negligence,⁸⁹ particularly where the ordinance or statute violated is a traffic regulation intended to conserve the safety of the traveling public,⁹⁰ unless such violation was not a contributory cause to the injury.⁹¹

c. Coasters

Whether or not a person who is injured while coasting on municipal streets is guilty of contributory negligence depends on the surrounding circumstances, and the mere fact of coasting on a street, unless forbidden by ordinance, does not constitute contributory negligence.

The mere fact that plaintiff was coasting on municipal streets does not show contributory negligence,⁹² but whether or not there was negligence will depend on the surrounding circumstances.⁹³

Where coasting is forbidden by ordinance it may constitute contributory negligence,⁹⁴ except where violation of the coasting ordinance was not a proximate cause of injury.⁹⁵

d. Pedestrians

- (1) In general
- (2) Crossing street

(1) In General

In the use of municipal streets pedestrians are required to exercise ordinary and reasonable care for their own safety. The preferential right of a pedestrian to the use of a sidewalk does not excuse him from the duty to exercise due care, although it does affect the precautions necessary to constitute due care.

In the use of municipal streets pedestrians are required to exercise ordinary or reasonable care under the circumstances.⁹⁶ The right of a pedestrian to use any part of a municipal street for the purpose of travel, as discussed supra § 1759, is subject to the exercise of due care, governed by the actual use of the highway.⁹⁷ He is not negligent, as a matter of law, in walking in the street instead of on the sidewalk,⁹⁸ nor is he negligent as a matter of law because he fails constantly to look behind to discover danger from approaching vehicles.⁹⁹

On sidewalk. A pedestrian using the sidewalk along a street has a right to assume that anyone using it who does not have an equal right to its use will exercise due care to protect him from injury.¹

He is not required to anticipate or maintain a lookout for vehicles on a sidewalk,² and in the absence of negligence on his part he may recover for injuries caused by his being struck by a vehicle thereon.³ However, he may not exercise his preferential right to the use of the sidewalk in an arbitrary or unreasonable manner, or without regard to the lesser right of other possible users.⁴ He is bound to take reasonable precautions to protect himself from injury;⁵ and in passing over a crossing on the sidewalk he is required to exercise care commensurate with the danger he is liable to encounter,⁶ although he is not governed by the same rules on approaching a private crossing over the sidewalk as on arriving at an intersection of two public highways.⁷

(2) Crossing Street

(a) In general

(b) Between intersections or not at regular crossings

(a) In General

A pedestrian, in crossing a street, is under the duty to exercise such care for his safety as the circumstances require.

In crossing a street a pedestrian must exercise his faculties to look for approaching vehicles and must exercise such reasonable care as the surrounding circumstances require⁸ and any infirmity or physical weakness necessitates.⁹ The particular acts necessary to constitute a proper lookout in crossing a street are not prescribed by law,¹⁰ and what constitutes a proper lookout is to be determined from all the facts and circumstances existing at the time, and is such as would be kept under the circumstances by a person of ordinary care and prudence.¹¹

A pedestrian must use his judgment as to how and when to cross a street without a collision,¹² and must use his powers of observation to discover approaching vehicles,¹³ at a time when his observation is not temporarily obstructed.¹⁴ Although a pedestrian is not under a positive duty to stop, look, and listen for the approach of vehicles before attempting to cross a street,¹⁵ or imperatively required, as a matter of law, to look both ways when he starts to cross a street,¹⁶ except perhaps where there is heavy vehicular travel,¹⁷ it is his duty, immediately before placing himself in a position of danger, to look in the direction from which danger may be anticipated,¹⁸ and he is bound to see that which by a proper use of his senses he might have seen.¹⁹ He must continue to exercise reasonable care while crossing the entire roadway.²⁰ However, he is not, while crossing, obliged to be constantly on the lookout for approaching vehicles,²¹ and his observation need not extend beyond the distance within which vehicles moving at a lawful speed would endanger him.²²

In crossing a street a pedestrian is not required to anticipate negligence on the part of another.²³ He may assume that others using the highway will exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring him,²⁴ that the driver of a vehicle will exercise proper caution in approaching a street crossing,²⁵ and that persons driving on the street will not violate any ordinance or law²⁶ and that they will observe traffic regulations.²⁷ He may reasonably expect that danger from vehicles will arise only from persons driving in conformity with rules of the road,²⁸ and not at an unlawful rate of speed.²⁹

Pedestrian with right of way. Although a statute enacting vehicular traffic rules gives pedestrians the right of way at crossings in town and cities, pedestrians are not thereby absolved from duty to use reasonable care;³⁰ but the fact that a pedestrian has the right of way is a factor in the determination of what constitutes the exercise of ordinary care with respect to the use of the senses and otherwise.³¹

Traffic signals. A pedestrian's duty to exercise ordinary care and caution for his own safety exists, notwithstanding he is crossing an intersection on the "go" or green light of a traffic signal.³² He is chargeable with negligence if he starts against the signal,³³ particularly where a statute or ordinance expressly prohibits pedestrians from crossing against such signals;³⁴ but it is not negligence for a pedestrian to start across a street when the signal is against vehicular traffic thereon, although the signal may be changed before he reaches the other side, and he has the right of way against a vehicle thereafter approaching.³⁵ Where a pedestrian enters a street intersection with a "go" traffic signal, he may assume that all persons on a cross street will observe the traffic signal.³⁶

Proximate cause. Where one is negligent by failing to look before crossing a street, in order to escape the consequences of his negligence he must prove that, even if he had looked, the accident would still have happened.³⁷ A pedestrian's right to recover for injuries sustained in crossing a street is not defeated by his violation of an ordinance governing the conduct of pedestrians crossing a street where such violation was not the cause of the injury.³⁸

(b) Between Intersections or Not at Regular Crossings

In the absence of ordinance prohibiting such action, it is not negligence as a matter of law for a pedestrian to cross a public street at a point where there is no crosswalk, or at a place other than a regular intersection; but in crossing at such a place he must exercise due care, and this requires greater caution than if he were at an established crossing.

The right of a pedestrian to cross the street at any place, discussed supra § 1759, is subject to the requirement that in so doing he must use ordinary care under the conditions as they exist.³⁹ In the absence of an ordinance prohibiting such action, it is not negligence as a matter of law for a pedestrian to cross a public street at a point where there is no crosswalk, or at a place other than a regular intersection;⁴⁰ and, assuming that a pedestrian's violation of an ordinance giving vehicles the right of way between street intersections and crossings makes a prima facie showing of negligence, it does not constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law.⁴¹ In crossing at such a place, however, he must exercise greater caution than if he were at an established crossing,⁴² particularly where an ordinance makes the right of pedestrians between intersections inferior to that of vehicles or gives pedestrians the right of way at street crossings and vehicles the right of way at other points in the street.⁴³

unless he is in a locality where no street intersections or crossings exist.⁴⁴ Under a provision which not only gives the right of way to vehicles between intersections or places designated as crosswalks, but also provides that pedestrians shall cross a street only at cross street intersections and places designated as crosswalks, a pedestrian who crosses the street between intersections is guilty of negligence as a matter of law.⁴⁵ The violation of an ordinance relative to crossing streets between intersections or at places other than a crosswalk, however, will not preclude any right to recover for injuries sustained in making such a crossing where such violation was not a proximate cause of the injury.⁴⁶ An ordinance providing that pedestrians must cross at right angles, in crossing the street at intersections, has no application where the accident did not occur at an intersection, but near one.⁴⁷

Under the last clear chance doctrine, defendant may be held liable for injuring a pedestrian, even though the latter was negligent in consequence of crossing a street at a place other than a crosswalk in violation of an ordinance.⁴⁸

e. Persons Working on or in Street

Persons working on or in the streets, although required to exercise reasonable care for their own safety, have been held not to be required to exercise the same quantum of care as pedestrians who are merely crossing the street.

been held not to be required to exercise the same diligence or quantum of care as pedestrians who are merely crossing the street,⁵⁰ whether or not his work has a direct relation to the streets.⁵¹

f. Persons Boarding, Alighting from, or on, Streetcar

Persons boarding, or alighting from, and the occupants and operators of, streetcars must exercise due care to avoid injury.

One standing in the street waiting to board a streetcar, who observes an approaching team, is not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to keep constant watch on it to avoid being struck.⁵² There is no absolute rule of law requiring one about to alight from a streetcar to look up and down the street before alighting in order to prevent injury from passing vehicles.⁵³ One alighting from a streetcar may assume that a vehicle will not be driven in a manner dangerous to alighting passengers.⁵⁴

It is not negligence per se for a passenger to stand on the running board of an open streetcar,⁵⁵ and one standing momentarily on the running board of a streetcar while looking for a seat is not negligent in failing to pay heed to a team passing the car.⁵⁶ The motorman of a streetcar is negligent per se, precluding a recovery for injuries sustained by him in a collision, when he operates his car at such a speed that he cannot stop it within the distance at which he can see an obstruction.⁵⁷ A motorman, however, is not negligent in failing to anticipate a runaway horse coming down the track at night.⁵⁸

g. Children

The contributory negligence of a child will preclude its recovery for injuries received on a municipal street, but its physical and mental capacity is considered in the determination of whether or not its conduct constituted contributory negligence and a child is not held to the same standard of conduct required of an adult.

A child is bound to use such care as its physical and mental capacity permits;⁵⁹ and recovery for injuries received on the street will be denied where they proximately resulted from the negligence of the child,⁶⁰ but not where there was no negligence.⁶¹ In determining whether a child's conduct constituted negligence, it cannot be judged by what an adult should have done,⁶² for what might constitute negligence in an adult is not necessarily negligence in a child.⁶³

Playing in the street, in violation of an ordinance, is not contributory negligence where such act did not proximately cause the injury of the child.⁶⁴

Violation of ordinance by engaging in occupation in street as constituting negligence see supra § 1788 f.

Work necessitating obstruction of street

Employees whose work required them to be in or on public streets and also requires obstructions in or about such streets which otherwise would be in violation of law are not thereby necessarily guilty of negligence in performance of their work, but must take reasonable precaution and use reasonable means to guard against possible injury resulting from such unusual conditions—*Haszczyzn v. e. Actions for Damages

§ 1790. In General

General rules as to actions apply in the case of actions for injuries on the streets or other public ways of a municipal corporation.

The general rules applicable in the case of actions for injuries arising out of the use of highways generally, discussed in Highways § 246, are applicable in the case of actions for injuries on the streets or other public ways of a municipal corporation.⁶⁵ Actions for injuries resulting from the operation of motor vehicles are discussed in Motor Vehicles §§ 494-560.

§ 1791. Pleading

- a. In general
- b. Issues, proof, and variance

a. In General

In an action for damages arising out of the use of streets and sidewalks, the declaration, petition, or complaint must allege the facts essential to the plaintiff's cause of action.

In accordance with general rules of pleading, and more particularly pleading in actions based on negligence, the declaration, petition, or complaint in an action for damages arising out of the use of streets and sidewalks must allege the facts essential to plaintiff's cause of action.⁶⁶ It is not necessary to allege that at the time of the injury the street on which it is alleged the accident occurred was open to the public.⁶⁷ Also, a complaint in an action for injuries to a pedestrian while walking on a sidewalk is not demurrable for not alleging that the sidewalk was for the exclusive use of pedestrians, that fact being implied.⁶⁸ Where, in a suit against the municipality, it appears from the complaint that the injury was caused by an ambulance which was being operated for a public hospital of a municipal corporation, the failure to allege that the hospital was operated for private gain and profit has been held to be fatal.⁶⁹ Traffic ordinances must be pleaded the same as any other fact.⁷⁰

b. Issues, Proof, and Variance

In an action for damages arising out of the use of streets and sidewalks, the plaintiff can recover only on proof of the specific negligence charged where he has alleged specific acts of negligence.

In an action for damages arising out of the use of streets and sidewalks, where plaintiff has alleged specific acts of negligence, he can recover only on proof of the specific negligence charged.⁷¹ A person leading a horse along a street has been held to be liable for the injury done by the horse through the person's negligence without the necessity of proving scienter.⁷² Under a general allegation of negligent and reckless driving, any evidence otherwise competent tending to show such driving is admissible.⁷³ Traffic ordinances, in order to be available, must be proved as any other fact.⁷⁴ Evidence is admissible under the general issue to excuse the presence of a vehicle on the wrong side of the street.⁷⁵ A cause of action for injuries, based on the ground that the driver of a horse was negligent, is disassociated from any liability for the keeping of a vicious horse, and, in an action for the negligence of the driver, evidence of viciousness of the horse is inadmissible.⁷⁶

§ 1792. Evidence

- a. Presumptions and burden of proof
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

The burden is on the plaintiff in an action for damages arising out of the use of streets and sidewalks to establish the facts material to his cause of action.

Under general rules as to presumptions and the burden of proof in civil actions generally, the burden is on plaintiff in an action for damages arising out of the use of streets and sidewalks to establish the facts material to his cause of action,⁷⁷ as, for example, the negligence of defendant,⁷⁸ his responsibility for the act or instrumentality complained of,⁷⁹ and that the act complained of was the proximate cause of the injury.⁸⁰ In some jurisdictions plaintiff has the burden of proving the absence of his own contributory negligence,⁸¹ although, under the rules applicable in cases of negligence generally, in other jurisdictions the burden of establishing contributory negligence is on defendant.⁸²

Under the rules governing the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur generally, the mere proof of the injury does not raise a presumption of defendant's negligence,⁸³ but when the thing causing the injury is shown to be under the control of defendant and the accident is such as does not happen if reasonable care is used, it does, in the absence of explanation by defendant, afford sufficient evidence that the accident arose from want of care on his part.⁸⁴

Violation of regulation or law of the road. In case of a collision between a vehicle on the wrong side of the road and one coming from the other direction, it is presumed that the collision was caused by the negligence of the driver of the vehicle on the wrong side of the road.⁸⁵ The burden is on him who violates the law of the road to show that his act was not the proximate cause of the injury or that there were justifiable circumstances which excuse his conduct.⁸⁶ A statute providing that the violation of a one-way ordinance should not render the operator of a vehicle a trespasser frees the operator from the burden consequent on being a "trespasser".⁸⁷

Any evidence which is otherwise competent and is relevant to the issues may be admitted in an action for an injury arising from a negligent or wrongful use of a street or other public way.

Runaway horse

(1) Mere fact of runaway does not prove negligence of driver of horse-drawn vehicle on streets—McLaughlin v. American Ice Co., 100 Pa.Super. 216—Quicksall v. Abbotts Alderney Dairies, 89 Pa.Super. 420.

(2) However, leaving a horse unattended on a city street and not under the control of a driver raises a presumption of negligence placing on the person so doing the burden of justifying the act.—Evans v. Scott Powell Dairies, 26 A.2d 449, 344 Pa. 595—Friel v. Supplee-Wills-Jones Milk Co., 10 A.2d 107, 138 Pa.Super. 23—Ross v. Freihofer Baking Co., 163 A. 43, 107 Pa.Super. 151.

(3) So evidence of injury by runaway team left unattended was held to make prima facie case of negligence, which owner was bound to explain.—Setzkorn v. City of Buffalo, 219 N.Y.S. 351, 219 App.Div. 416, affirmed 159 N.E. 670, 246 N.Y. 605.

Eye injury

Res ipsa loquitur was inapplicable to eye injury from particles of glass, where injury was sustained as pedestrian reached point about eight feet from end of a pane of glass being trimmed by employees—Curby v. Bennett Glass & Paint Co., 103 P. 2d 657, 99 Utah 80.

44 C.J. p 1072 note 51.

87. Mass.—Scranton v. Crosby, 9 N. E.2d 391, 298 Mass. 15.

Subject to the general rules of evidence in civil actions, any evidence, which is otherwise competent and is relevant to the issues, may be admitted in an action for an injury arising from a negligent or wrongful use of a street or other public way,⁸⁸ as, for example, evidence of regulatory ordinances or statutes,⁸⁹ and of their violation⁹⁰ or of a compliance therewith.⁹¹ Evidence as to a regulatory ordinance is inadmissible, however, where there is no evidence warranting its application.⁹² Evidence of the appearance of the street and a team after a collision is admissible on the question of the injury and its extent,⁹³ and testimony as to a particular part of a wagon injured in a collision is admissible to show the point of contact, although damages to the wagon are not claimed.⁹⁴ Although a team of defendant was rightfully traveling on the left side of a street to avoid a crowd, the fact is competent for the consideration of the jury in passing on the conduct of plaintiff.⁹⁵

The testimony of experts as to how near a team may drive with relation to another team in the exercise of care and skill in approaching and driving past without danger is inadmissible, at least where such question is a matter of common knowledge.⁹⁶

In an action for personal injury caused by plaintiff's horse taking fright at a wild animal exhibited on a street corner, evidence is admissible that other horses were frightened.⁹⁷ Evidence of the vicious disposition of a horse ridden by plaintiff and its tendency to bolt is admissible on the question of contributory negligence.⁹⁸

General rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence are applicable in an action for damages arising from the negligent or wrongful use of streets and sidewalks.

The general rules determinative of the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions generally apply in actions for injury arising from the use of streets or other public ways,⁹⁹ as, for example, with reference to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict generally,¹ or to establish defendant's negligence in striking a pedestrian,² or in injuring a child on the streets,³ or a person approaching or leaving a street car,⁴ or a passenger or a person on a street car,⁵ or a person working in the street.⁶ Likewise, the sufficiency of evidence has been adjudicated with respect to establishing defendant's negligence in colliding with another vehi-

General rules have also been applied in determining the sufficiency of evidence to show a violation of traffic regulations;¹⁴ to show negligence in leaving horses or other animals unattended or unsecured;¹⁵ to show negligence resulting in a runaway;¹⁶ to show negligence in leading animals;¹⁷ and to show the contributory negligence of plaintiff¹⁸ or the absence thereof.¹⁹ Evidence which may be said to establish negligence on the part of defendant is insufficient to support a recovery where it equally tends to show negligence on the part of plaintiff.²⁰ A verdict for plaintiff cannot be set aside because the evidence leaves it uncertain which of two causes was responsible for the injury if defendant is liable for both causes.²¹ Proof of the violation of governmental regulations constitutes some evidence of negligence in connection with other facts,²² and a statute providing that the violation of a one-way ordinance should not render the operator of a vehicle a trespasser has been held not to change the rule that illegal conduct is evidence of negligence.²³ Driving on the wrong side of the road may be presumptive evidence of negligence,²⁴ which may be overcome by proof of circumstances showing the necessity of the action.²⁵

General rules of trial apply in actions for damages resulting from the negligent or wrongful use of streets or sidewalks.

The rules governing the course and conduct of trials in civil actions generally apply in actions for injuries resulting from the negligent or wrongful use of public streets or sidewalks.²⁶

§ 1794. — Questions of Law and Fact

- a. In general
- b. Contributory negligence

a. In General

In actions arising out of injuries from the use of streets, it is for the jury to determine controverted questions of fact if the evidence is conflicting or such that different inferences may fairly be drawn therefrom; but the evidence may be such as to require that the defendant's freedom from liability be determined by the court as a matter of law.

Under the general rules applicable to the trial of civil actions, in actions arising out of injuries from the use of streets, it is, where the trial is to a jury, for the jury to determine controverted questions of fact if the evidence is conflicting or such that different inferences may fairly be drawn therefrom.²⁷ Hence, the question of defendant's negligence is one of fact for the jury,²⁸ as, for example, in case of injuries occasioned to pedestrians,²⁹ or children in the street,³⁰ or persons working in the street,³¹ or in the case of injuries arising from collisions between vehicles.³² The question of defendant's negligence should also be submitted to the jury, where the evidence is conflicting, in the case of injuries occurring because of horses not being under control,³³ or because of their running away,³⁴ or because of their having been insecurely fastened or unattended,³⁵ or because of the manner in which a vehicle is loaded.³⁶ It is also a question for the jury whether defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries received by plaintiff.³⁷

On the other hand, where the facts present no conflict and furnish the basis for but a single inference and that favorable to defendant, his freedom from liability is to be determined by the court as a matter of law.³⁸ Also, the reasonableness of an ordinance respecting the right of way, if drawn into question, is for the court.³⁹ The causal connection between the violation of a statute as to the use of highways and an accident may be so clear on undisputed facts as to be a question of law,⁴⁰ but in other situations it is a question of fact for the jury.⁴¹ So the violation of a statute or ordinance regulating the operation of vehicles on streets is not always negligence as a matter of law.⁴²

A verdict should be directed for the defendant on the ground of contributory negligence, in an action for injuries received in a public street or way, only where reasonable minds would agree that the injury was caused by contributory negligence and there is no evidence on which the jury might reasonably find otherwise.

A verdict should be directed for defendant on the ground of contributory negligence, in an action for injuries received in a public street or way, only where reasonable minds would agree that the injury was caused by contributory negligence and there is no evidence on which the jury might reasonably find otherwise.⁴³ So, where the evidence is conflicting and the inferences to be drawn from it are not clear, the question whether plaintiff has exercised such care and diligence to avoid injury as was to be expected of a reasonably careful and prudent person under the circumstances is for the jury.⁴⁴ For example, the contributory negligence of a pedestrian ordinarily is for the jury,⁴⁵ as is that of a child injured while in the street,⁴⁶ or a person working in the street,⁴⁷ or boarding or leaving a street car,⁴⁸ or riding thereon.⁴⁹ In like man-

Injury to pedestrian

In action for injuries to pedestrian, struck by bicycle while crossing street, evidence that plaintiff looked to left and right when six feet from curb and could see four blocks along street, but saw no moving vehicle before starting across street, was insufficient to make out prima facie case for jury, in absence of any evidence as to how bicycle was ridden, where it came from, or what rider did or failed to do.—*Wass v. ner, plaintiff's contributory negligence in an action arising out of a collision between vehicles ordinarily is for the jury.⁵⁰ It is also a question for the jury whether plaintiff's negligence was the proximate cause of his injuries.⁵¹

The question of contributory negligence is one of law, on the other hand, where the facts are undisputed.⁵² So, where the only conclusion possible from the testimony is that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, a dismissal of the action is warranted.⁵³ However, the evidence as to defendant's negligence on ascertaining plaintiff's position of peril may be sufficient to warrant submission of the case to the jury under the so-called "humanitarian" rule.⁵⁴

The parties in an action for damages arising out of the negligent or wrongful use of streets or sidewalks are entitled to instructions on any issue that the evidence tends to support, which is not sufficiently covered by other instructions; but the instructions must conform to the issues as raised by the pleadings, must correctly state the law applicable to the issues, and must not be misleading.

In accordance with the rules applicable in civil cases generally, the parties in an action for damages arising out of the negligent or wrongful use of streets or sidewalks are entitled to instructions on any issue that the evidence tends to support,⁵⁵ which is not sufficiently covered by other instructions;⁵⁶ but a requested instruction is properly refused when so worded as to exclude consideration of relevant evidence⁵⁷ or principles of law,⁵⁸ or which states a principle inapplicable to the particular facts of the case,⁵⁹ or where the evidence fails to raise the issue on which the instruction is sought,⁶⁰ or where the requested instruction is in part correct and in part incorrect.⁶¹ If a requested instruction is correct as far as given, but is not sufficiently full, it is the duty of counsel to ask for a further explanatory charge.⁶²

Instructions must be predicated on the evidence and conform to the issues,⁶³ as raised by the pleadings,⁶⁴ and they should correctly state the law⁶⁵ applicable to all issues involved, such as the rights

§ 1796. — Verdict and Findings

In an action for damages arising out of the negligent or wrongful use of public streets or sidewalks, special findings of the jury must be consistent with the general verdict.

As in other civil actions, special findings of the jury in an action for damages arising out of the negligent or wrongful use of public streets or sidewalks must be consistent with the general verdict.⁷⁶ However, a finding that the evidence establishes no cause for the running away of a team will not defeat a finding of the negligence of defendant in failing to secure the team and of defendant's liability for its consequences.⁷⁷

§ 1797. Damages

General rules of damages apply in actions based on the negligent or wrongful use of streets or sidewalks.

The general rules of damages, except as modified by statute, apply to actions for injuries resulting from the negligent or wrongful use of public streets or sidewalks.⁷⁸

f. Offenses and Penalties

§ 1798. In General

A violation of regulations concerning the use of public streets and ways is frequently made a criminal or penal offense; but a prosecution for the violation is warranted when, and only when, the conduct complained of is within the terms of the statute or ordinance.

Within the limitations imposed by charter, constitutional, and statutory provisions, a municipality in the exercise of its police power may enforce its ordinances and regulations by the infliction of punishment for the violation thereof as discussed supra § 314; and, where such power exists, a violation of regulations concerning the use of public streets and ways is frequently made a criminal or penal offense.⁷⁹ So the violation of traffic regulations promulgated by a police commission may be made punishable as an offense, and a civil action for the penalty is not the only remedy which is available.⁸⁰ However, an ordinance prohibiting a certain use of the street under a penalty of a fixed sum does not authorize the arrest and criminal prosecution of a person for violating the ordinance.⁸¹ Traffic regulations providing for fine or imprisonment for the violation thereof have been held to be penal in nature and hence subject to strict construction.⁸²

A prosecution for violation of such regulations is warranted when, and only when, the conduct complained of is within the terms of the statute or ordinance;⁸³ and the prosecution may not be maintained where the acts or omissions of accused do

Matters considered
In determining whether causing a wagon drawn by team of burros to not constitute a violation⁸⁴ or fall within an exception to the prohibition⁸⁵ of the regulation. Under an ordinance regulating or prohibiting the distribution of pamphlets, circulars, or other advertising matter, the mere act of distribution makes the offense complete,⁸⁶ but there must be a distribution on a public street or other public place denoted for the ordinance to be violated.⁸⁷ Under the terms of some ordinances, accused may not be charged with a violation in the case of distribution of a single pamphlet,⁸⁸ or distribution of political circulars⁸⁹ or pamphlets of historic and social interest,⁹⁰ or in the case of sale of newspapers or other printed matter.⁹¹ It has also been held that a member of a religious sect who sold religious pamphlets on a city sidewalk did not violate an ordinance prohibiting the sale of pamphlets between certain hours on designated sidewalks, where the sale of the religious pamphlets did not interfere with traffic or with the safety, comfort, or convenience of the public in the use of the streets.⁹²

Where a city ordinance forbids animals being driven through its streets to go on any sidewalk, or otherwise to occupy, obstruct, injure, or encumber, such sidewalks so as to interfere with their use by passengers, one who voluntarily drives animals through the streets must prevent them at all hazards from doing the acts forbidden; and if he fails to do so he may be convicted of violating the ordinance.⁹³

§ 1799. Persons Liable

Persons who are responsible for an act or omission constituting a violation of a regulation concerning the use of public streets or ways, and who are expressly or impliedly within the terms of the regulation, may be prosecuted for its violation.

As a general rule, persons who are responsible for an act or omission constituting a violation of a regulation concerning the use of public streets or ways, and who are expressly or impliedly within the terms of the regulation, may be prosecuted for its violation.⁹⁴ It has been held, however, that an ordinance prohibiting the distribution of advertising matter on the streets does not impose a penalty on one who furnishes another circulars for distribution on the streets.⁹⁵ The owner of a vehicle is not lia-

A prosecution for a violation of a regulation concerning the use of public streets and walks is subject to any valid defense which may be available to the accused.

A prosecution for a violation of a regulation concerning the use of public streets and walks is subject to any valid defense which may be available to accused.⁹⁷ Accordingly, it may be a defense that the order of a policeman alleged to have been disobeyed was arbitrary and unreasonable;⁹⁸ and the urgency of the duty of a public official may be a defense to a prosecution for the violation of a traffic rule.⁹⁹ It is no defense, however, to a prosecution for playing a musical instrument on the streets without a license that there was no actual disturbance or breach of the peace on the particular occasion.¹ Also, it is generally no defense that the intention was good,² or that efforts were made by accused to prevent a breach of the ordinance,³ or that obedience to the ordinance would raise the price of necessities.⁴

Where an ordinance imposed a penalty on the owner of a vehicle kept for hire for neglect to light the lamps of his vehicle at night, it is no defense that such owner was not present and had no knowledge of such violation.⁵ Under a statute providing that, in cities or villages, or on streets usually congested with traffic, slow moving vehicles must keep near the right curb, it is no defense that a driver was not blocking any traffic and was driving on a prohibited part of the street to save his horses.⁶ A driver of a cab left standing on the street is to be deemed personally with the cab, although actually out of sight in a railroad station soliciting passengers, so as to preclude him from denying that he was standing in a place different from that assigned him by the municipal officers.⁷

Fast driving. It is no defense to a complaint for fast driving that the mayor and city marshal had given oral permission,⁸ or that no person was endangered by such driving,⁹ or that accused had a reputation as a careful driver;¹⁰ but accused may prove his motive where a discretion is allowed to the jury in fixing the imprisonment.¹¹

Driving on sidewalk. It is no defense to a prosecution for unlawfully driving or riding on a sidewalk that others did likewise without complaint,¹² or that the informer contributed nothing to the original construction of the sidewalk or did not aid in keeping it in repair,¹³ or that the abutting owner consented to such use of the sidewalk,¹⁴ or that the vehicle portion of the street was too muddy where its condition was known to the driver before he started out.¹⁵

§ 1801. Prosecution and Punishment

The complaint or other pleading in a prosecution for violation of a regulation concerning the use of public streets or ways must sufficiently charge an offense. Questions relating to issues, proof, and variance, evidence, and questions of law and fact in such prosecutions are governed by general rules.

The complaint, information, indictment, or warrant in a prosecution for violation of a regulation concerning the use of public streets and ways must sufficiently charge an offense which it is within the power of the municipality to create.¹⁶ A complaint

Soliciting union membership

Charge of single act of soliciting a man on town street to join labor union and pay membership fee therein did not amount to charge of operating a business on such street within power of town to regulate conduct of private business on streets—Pittman v. Nix, supra.

Negating matters of defense

Fact that the pamphlets which defendant was selling, allegedly in violation of city ordinance prohibiting the sale of pamphlets between certain hours on designated sidewalks, were religious pamphlets which defendant had a right to sell and that his conduct did not interfere with the safety, comfort, or convenience of the public in the use of the streets, were matters of defense properly to be introduced by defendant and were not matters which for violating an ordinance which uses substantially the words of the by-law or regulation ordinarily is sufficient.¹⁷ Where willfulness¹⁸ or unreasonableness¹⁹ is a necessary element to constitute the offense, such words must be used in the complaint. Where a given act is made by ordinance an offense in itself without reference to actual obstruction of public travel or expressed intent to obstruct, the complaint need not allege that the public travel was obstructed and that accused intended so to do.²⁰ The facts that an affidavit contained the name of a police officer at the beginning as the informant, but was sworn to by another as city marshal, have been held not to destroy the prosecution.²¹ Only allegations in the information itself will be considered by the court on a motion to dismiss the information.²²

Issues, proof, and variance. A conviction for a common-law nuisance cannot be had under a complaint for violating a by-law.²³ In an action or prosecution for fast driving, it is not necessary to prove that any person was endangered by such driving, where this is not required by the ordinance or by-law.²⁴

Evidence. The usual rules relating to evidence in criminal prosecutions apply to prosecutions for unlawful use of the streets.²⁵ The operator of a vehicle charged with violation of a regulation requiring him to stop at a crosswalk line on the change of a traffic signal may show the circumstances under which he proceeded in order that it may be determined as a fact whether an emergency existed excusing a failure to stop under the terms of the regulation.²⁶

Questions of law and fact. Whether a nuisance at common law was committed by using a street as a stand for hourly coaches is a question of fact for the jury;²⁷ but whether an ordinance prohibiting driving on streets faster than a rapid walk is reasonable is a question of law.²⁸

Punishment. Where accused was found guilty and fined for each of three infractions of traffic regulations prohibiting advertising vehicles on streets, the sentence may be suspended in one case where two infractions occurred on one day.²⁹

Under some statutes the action of a metropolitan sewer district in dealing with the property of incorporated towns must meet with their approval.³⁵

§ 1803. — Location

Municipal authority to locate sewers cannot be abdicated by contract. The location of sewage disposal works is within the discretion of the municipal authorities, with which the courts will not interfere in the absence of a showing of arbitrary or capricious action.

The authority of a municipal corporation to locate sewers is legislative³⁶ and cannot be abdicated by the municipality through a contract.³⁷ The location of a sewage disposal plant or works is committed to the discretion of the municipal authorities,³⁸ and the courts are not authorized to interfere with the exercise of such discretion in the absence of pleading and proof that the action of the official in selecting a particular location was not the exercise of a fair discretion but was the result of an arbitrary or capricious choice on their part.³⁹ The municipality may use the streets for the construction of a sewerage system.⁴⁰ A sewerage system need not extend to tidewater when not so required by statute,⁴¹ and, where it does not so extend, statutes relating only to sewers extending to tidewater are not applicable.⁴²

§ 1804. — Construction, Maintenance, and Repair

The construction, maintenance, and repair of public sewers and drains by municipal corporations are discussed supra § 1049.

§ 1805. — Regulation, Control, and Use

- a. In general
- b. Connection and use generally
- c. Operation and effect of connection or permit therefor
- d. Charges for use or connection

a. In General

The right of a municipal corporation to regulate and control the use of its drains and sewers is a necessary incident of its ownership. A municipal corporation, provided it retains control, may permit any appropriate use to be made of its sewers and drains and fix reasonable conditions for such use.

The right of a municipal corporation to regulate and control the use of its drains and sewers is an exercise of its police power,⁴³ and is a necessary incident of its ownership thereof;⁴⁴ and such right may be protected and enforced by injunction⁴⁵ or the imposition of proper penalties.⁴⁶ Where a statute confers on a municipality the power to regulate the use of sewers, and neither defines the limits of that power nor prescribes the manner of its exercise, the municipality is necessarily invested with power to exercise its discretion,⁴⁷ and the courts

will not interfere with such action unless it appears to be unreasonable or arbitrary.⁴⁸

Unless restrained by statute, a municipal corporation may permit any appropriate use to be made of its sewers,⁴⁹ drains,⁵⁰ and gutters,⁵¹ and it may fix reasonable conditions for the use thereof;⁵² but, in granting permission for the use of its sewers in the first instance, and for the continuing use thereof, the municipality must at all times retain control,⁵³ and any attempt by way of contract to deprive it of that control is void.⁵⁴ An open drain or gutter designed for carrying off surface waters must not be used by individuals or corporations for purposes which will create a nuisance.⁵⁵

Soil taken from one part of a sewerage system may be removed to another,⁵⁶ and the surface of lands acquired for sewerage purposes may also be used for school purposes.⁵⁷

While it is not ultra vires for a municipality to enter into an agreement with any person or municipal authority having property or public rights to protect, relating to the operation of a tidal chamber at the outlet of a sewer,⁵⁸ when not authorized by the legislature to make such a contract, a township through which a municipal sewer passes cannot contract with the municipality, with respect to the use of the sewer in another municipality, so as to acquire a right to compel specific performance of the contract⁵⁹ or to enjoin a breach or violation thereof for the sole reason that the violation results in a public nuisance.⁶⁰

b. Connection and Use Generally

Property owners have no right to use or connect with a municipal sewer without the consent of the municipal corporation; it may permit such use or connection or, particularly under empowering statute, require connection; and reasonable conditions and regulations as to such use or connection may be imposed.

Some statutes confer control over sewer connections on municipal corporations.⁶¹ Since, as discussed supra § 1802, the ownership of public sewers is in the municipality, property owners have no right to make connections with, or use, a municipal sewer or sewer system without the consent of the municipality;⁶² but the municipality may permit them to make such connections or use,⁶³ and may

Under statute, the privilege of connecting service sewers with main or trunk sewers is under the absolute control of the governing body of the city.—Johnson v. Rapid City, 231 N.W. 524, 57 S.D. 173.

Effect of assessment; annexation

(1) Where lands outside city were assessed to pay for sewer system, the owners acquired a right to use the system and a beneficial interest in the improvements which could not be taken from them by the annexation by the city of a part of the lands included in the improvement district, and city could not arbitrarily refuse the owners their right to use the system.—*City of El Cajon v. In the interest of the public health and welfare, a municipality may require property owners to connect with a sewer⁶⁷ at their own expense,⁶⁸ although the sewer runs through private property,⁶⁹ the legislature may properly and validly confer power on the municipality to impose such a requirement,⁷⁰ and, if the legislature does so, the municipality must comply with the requirements of the

Consideration

Monetary payment held sufficient consideration for option to connect sewer systems in contract between cities; and fact that city giving option was getting rid of the menace to the purity of its source of water supply was a valuable consideration for the giving of the option.—City of Des Moines v. City of West Des Moines, Iowa, 30 N.W.2d 500.

Petition and acceptance as contract

(1) A real estate company's petition to city council to connect certain lots with city sewer system and the city's formal resolution of acceptance of the proposal constituted an enforceable contract, and the contract did not need an ordinance to evidence its adoption—Gillfillan v. Haven, 53 A.2d 901, 161 Pa.Super. 114.

(2) Petition signed by landowners with property abutting on avenue, addressed to city council, and having for its purpose the obtaining of city's co-operation in laying out private sewer along avenue to connect with city sewer system, was not a binding contract on landowners who signed so that they could not withdraw therefrom before construction of sewer.—Harrell v. Sunylan Co., 97 S.W.2d 686, 128 Tex. 460.

Tax sale of some of lots served did not terminate contractual obligation of city—Gillfillan v. Haven, 53 A.2d 901, 161 Pa.Super. 114.

City's failure to pay sewer service charge was no defense to suit to compel compliance with ordinance requiring property owners to make sewer connections with system, since owners had other adequate remedy against city to compel payment of charge.—Francis v. City of Bowling Green, 82 S.W.2d 804, 259 Ky. 525.

Confiscatory nature of charges

Defense that rental charges imposed by ordinance requiring property owners to make connections were confiscatory could not be asserted by parties to suit to compel compliance, in absence of showing that rental to be paid by them was confiscatory.—Francis v. City of Bowling Green, supra.

Fact that other property was not served by the sewer system does not justify a property owner in refusing to make the connection as required by ordinance.—Francis v. City of Bowling Green, 82 S.W.2d 804, 259 Ky. 525.

Easement of owner; duty of city

Where city owns street in fee, abutting owner required to build and maintain sewer from his property to the main sewer in the street has only an easement in the street for his sewer connection, and the only duty the city owes him is not willfully to injure the sewer.—Colombe v. City of Niagara Falls, 295 N.Y.S. 84, 162 Misc. 594.

Damages from tree roots

Property owner putting in an improperly constructed sewer from his property to the main sewer cannot hold the city liable for damages to the sewer from roots of trees wholly on city property, where a properly constructed sewer would not be damaged by roots.—*Colombe v. Duty to fix rules by ordinance

By virtue of statute, it is duty of city council to fix by ordinance the rules by which it will enforce its right to compel property owners to make necessary sewer and water connections.—Seymour v. City of Ames, 255 N.W. 874, 218 Iowa 615.

statute.⁷¹ The reasonableness of such a requirement depends largely on the local terrain and the means deemed essential to protect the health and morals of the municipality.⁷² Some statutes, however, have been held not to confer power on a municipality to compel connection of outside vaults or privies with a sewer.⁷³

The state⁷⁴ or the municipality,⁷⁵ but no private person,⁷⁶ may impose conditions and regulations with respect to making connections, but such regulations and conditions must be reasonable.⁷⁷ The municipality may require, as conditions for permitting the connection, a written application with description of the property,⁷⁸ and the obtaining of a permit.⁷⁹ It may also require the connection to be made by a licensed tapper,⁸⁰ that the materials used shall be suitable for the purpose,⁸¹ and that the work shall be done under the supervision, or subject to the inspection and approval, of a municipal officer,⁸² or it may itself do the actual work of connection at the cost of the property owner;⁸³ but it cannot require the property owner to purchase the necessary materials from it,⁸⁴ or compel him to permit it to do at his expense the work on his own premises incidental to the connection which he might do himself or procure others to do,⁸⁵ although it may properly provide for the doing of the work under contract with the municipality at the expense of the property owner after he has failed to avail himself of ample opportunity to select and purchase the material and have the work done.⁸⁶ Under statute, land not abutting on a sewer may be entitled to sewer service without dedication of a portion thereof if such a plan is feasible.⁸⁷

A failure to comply with particular requirements may not render the completed connection unlawful,⁸⁸ and a strict compliance with the prescribed conditions may be waived by the municipality,⁸⁹ or irregularities in the proceedings of the municipal authorities may be waived by a property owner.⁹⁰ A connection or use made without permit makes one liable for the prescribed fees and charges⁹¹ or for

Constitutionality of statute

(1) A statute which permits a city, on constructing a sewer, to lay necessary pipes for house connections from the sewer to the curb line of the abutting lot, and authorizing the charge of the costs to the abutting premises, is not for such reason unconstitutional.—Van Wagener v. Paterson, 51 A. 922, 67 N.J. Law 455.

(2) A statute authorizing the disposal of the sewage of one municipality by another municipality and providing that owners shall connect with the system and that, on their failure, such latter municipality may cause connections to be made at the owner's expense, is not unconstitutional because the officers who may carry out such later provision may be called on to perform functions in another municipality.—Mead v. Turner, 119 N.Y.S. 526, 134 App.Div. 691, 694—44 C.J. p 173 note 97.

District sewers. Under a statute requiring that district sewers shall connect with public sewers or the natural course of drainage, the connection need not be direct,⁹³ but may be by means of another intermediate district sewer.⁹⁴ "The natural course of drainage," as the phrase is used in a statute, does not mean any natural course of drainage,⁹⁵ but the natural receptacle of the general sewerage system or some part thereof.⁹⁶

Permission granted by a municipal corporation to connect with its sewers is a license which may be revoked for sufficient cause at any time.

The grant by a municipal corporation of the privilege of connecting with its sewers is a license which may be revoked for sufficient cause at any time;⁹⁷ a municipality cannot grant a vested right in the use of its sewers.⁹⁸ A permit or license, granted by a municipality, to make a sewer connection means only that the licensee is permitted to empty his sewage into the system as long as the system will take care of it and the municipal authorities permit;⁹⁹ so, any license or permit to connect with a municipality's sewers must necessarily be contin-gent on the ability of the sewage system and disposal plant to digest and dispose of the licensee's or permittee's sewage.¹ A municipality, in granting a license or permit to make a connection with, and empty sewage into, its sewer system has no power to guarantee that it will successfully operate a sewage disposal plant or an adequate sewerage system,² and cannot by contract assume any liability for damages to any person whose sewage is inadequately treated³ or bind itself to receive and dispose of all the sewage which patrons may attempt to empty into it.⁴

Under some statutes the effect of the connection of a private sewer, at each end thereof, with a public sewer of the municipality, under an agreement between the municipality and the property owner, is to establish a mutual drainage system⁵ and to confer on the municipality the right to use the private sewer in common with its own sewer.⁶ A permit for a sewer connection runs with the land if it is issued to the owner,⁷ but is good only for the sewer and premises described,⁸ and authorizes the use of the sewer only for such purposes as are legitimate and proper.⁹

The municipality may sever a connection where it was made illegally¹⁰ or where the property owner has failed to pay the stipulated charge,¹¹ and a pro-

Effect of expenditure or contributions

The mere fact that one has ex-

City of Sioux Falls, supra.

Perpetual privilege

In absence of specific contract for future use of sewerage system between town and nonresident, latter may not take advantage of an ultra vires perpetual privilege for such use alleged to have been given by the town.—Town of Estes Park v. Mills, 65 P.2d 1086, 100 Colo. 94.

Contract held invalid

vision for such severance is a reasonable regulation.¹² The connection of premises other than those for which a permit was granted may constitute a breach of the condition of a bond given by a person engaged in the work of making sewer connections.¹³ Likewise, if for any reason the sewerage system or plant will not handle sewage from a particular source, by reason of its nature or quantity,¹⁴ or if such sewage is of such a character that it prevents the disposal plant from functioning,¹⁵ it is within the power of the municipality to require such sewer connection to be discontinued, and it may be its duty to do so.¹⁶ In the exercise of its discretion, with which the courts will not interfere unless the action is clearly unreasonable and arbitrary,¹⁷ the governing board of the municipality may revoke such licenses or permits as may be warranted by the capacity and ability of the sewers and disposal plant to dispose of sewage, and as the public interests may require.¹⁸

On the other hand, a property owner who has paid for his permit and established his connection according to the requirements may sue to enjoin the municipality from cutting off the connection,¹⁹ and, where a municipality accepts the dedication to public use of a lateral sewer connected with its sewage disposal system, persons who built the lateral sewer and whose property benefits thereby may enjoin the municipality from disconnecting it from the main system;²⁰ but property owners of a particular sewer district who have been assessed for the construction of sewers have no vested property rights in them,²¹ and cannot sue to enjoin persons whose property is outside of the district from making connections under license from the municipality,²² unless they can show that their private property will be materially injured thereby;²³ nor can a property owner constructing a sewer line under a public street, with the municipality's permission and without reservation or restriction in the grant with respect to the use of the sewer line, object to its use by other owners with the permission of the municipality, especially where the line has been almost wholly serviced by the municipality at its own cost.²⁴ Where a municipality has granted another a license to connect their sewer systems pending an agreement as to charges, and, on failure to reach an agreement, the first municipality, after notice, disconnects the systems, it has been held that a mandatory injunction to compel reconnection will not be granted.²⁵

A legal option contract between municipalities giving one the right to use the other's sewer system for an additional period or periods will not be declared void by equity;²⁶ nor will it be annulled on the ground that it may be impossible of performance in the future because of possible limitation on the latter's taxing power.²⁷ Likewise, an agreement of one municipality with another for connection with its sewer and disposal of the latter's sewage will not be canceled because it entails greater expense, and renders performance thereof more burdensome to the municipality, than was contemplated at the time the agreement was made.²⁸

An agreement exempting a user from charges for the construction or use of a sewer, or of connection therewith, does not exempt him from charges for the treatment and purification of the sewage emptied into the sewer by him.²⁹

Property owners in a sewer improvement district have been held, in particular circumstances, not estopped from maintaining an action against others to require the discontinuance of a connection with the sewers, on the ground that plaintiffs had induced the belief in such others that an outlet for sewage would be furnished;³⁰ and such property owners have the right to institute such suit after the com-

d. Charges for Use or Connection

- (1) In general
- (2) Mode of computation or measurement
- (3) Persons liable
- (4) Actions and remedies

(1) In General

A municipal corporation may fix the charges for using or connecting with its sewers, and the consumer impliedly agrees to pay them. The charges must be fair and reasonable, and not discriminatory; under most authorities they do not constitute a tax.

A municipal corporation is entitled to the same privilege of receiving payment for the service rendered in the ownership and operation of sewers as a private corporation would be,³³ and an ordinance imposing a sewer rental is not invalid because the municipality does not collect from itself an annual charge for the use of its sewers.³⁴ So, a municipality may fix and determine the fees and charges for making connection with, or for the use of, its sewers,³⁵ and it is not prevented from so doing by the fact that it has for years permitted connections³⁶ or use³⁷ to be made without charge; the state, by permitting the establishment of sewer rents, of necessity authorizes the discontinuance of free service.³⁸ The charges may be fixed and enforced by the usual and appropriate procedure for the collection of such charges,³⁹ and the consumer, by accepting the service with knowledge of the rates,⁴⁰ impliedly agrees to pay the charges therefor.⁴¹ A statute empowering municipalities to impose such charges has been held to apply solely to charges based on actual use of the sewer system,⁴² and not to authorize the requirement of payment by all persons to whom the sewer system is made available by its presence;⁴³ but an ordinance requiring the payment of sewer rental charges by the owners of all properties within the municipality and accessible to the sewer, whether or not they are users of the sewer system, has been held to be valid.⁴⁴

The charges must be reasonable,⁴⁵ fair and equitable,⁴⁶ must be fixed by ordinances which are not arbitrary,⁴⁷ and must be uniform and without discrimination against particular property owners;⁴⁸ but a higher rate for users outside the municipal limits than for those within may be proper.⁴⁹

Where the power to establish the rate is conferred by statute on the municipal authorities, the jurisdiction of the court in an action involving charges extends, at most, to considering whether or not the rate is unreasonable, arbitrary, and capricious,⁵⁰ and it has no power to establish a new rate;⁵¹ likewise, it has been held that it is the duty of the governing body of a municipality to decide on the rate,⁵² and that the court cannot set it aside unless it is clearly inequitable.⁵³

The municipality may require, as a condition for permitting the connection, the prepayment of a local assessment, if valid;⁵⁴ but an ordinance requiring owners of land formerly forfeited for delinquent taxes to pay, as a prerequisite to securing sewer service, that portion of a special assessment against the land, for such improvement, which was not realized from the proceeds of the sale of the land, has been held to be invalid.⁵⁵

A statute requiring the schedule of sewer rates by a sewer district applicable to property within a municipality to be approved by ordinance has been held not to require such formal action in the case of nonconcurrence by the municipality.⁵⁶

Nature of charge; tax. A charge for the use of, or connection with, a sewer system has been held a charge for special benefits received,⁵⁷ or a method of paying for the construction.⁵⁸ Such a charge, or a charge for sewer services, or a rental charge, is, under most authorities, not a tax,⁵⁹ or an assessment.⁶⁰ However, the rental may partake of the nature of a tax or assessment,⁶¹ and a charge for the use of a sewer has been referred to as a tax.⁶² A distinction has been made between the actual use of the facilities with knowledge of the rates charged, in which case the charges are not taxes, or a substitute for taxes, and not an exercise of the taxing power, but an obligation resting on contract,⁶³ and the imposition of a charge with no regard to the extent or value of the use made of the sewer facilities or whether any use is made, in which case the charge is in legal effect a tax, the obligation to pay it being created only by the exercise of the taxing power.⁶⁴

A service charge and the cost of connection to the system have been distinguished,⁶⁵ in that the former is for the daily use of the system, payable by the person who uses it, unless the contrary is clearly expressed,⁶⁶ while the latter occurs only at the time of the connection,⁶⁷ and is a feature of the premises⁶⁸ and in the nature of a permanent fixture.⁶⁹

The due certification and entry of a city sewerage service charge may create a valid lien against the premises for the amount of such charge.⁷⁰

Hearing. Where a statute provides for a public hearing, after notice, before the governing body of a municipal corporation prior to the establishment of rates to be charged for the use of a sewer, a person aggrieved by the rates must ordinarily avail himself of this remedy and cannot resort to the courts in the first instance.⁷¹

(2) Mode of Computation or Measurement

Charges by a municipal corporation for the use of its sewers must be in conformity with statute, and the volume of water delivered to the user has been held an acceptable basis for such charges.

A municipal corporation may fix, as the, or a, basis for computing the charge for the use of its sewers, the volume of water delivered to the user, as measured by the water meter,⁷² or the water rates, or rents.⁷³ A charge apportioned on the basis of the total cost of a whole outfall system and septic tank of a sewer improvement district has also been held equitable;⁷⁴ and, as between two cities, the basis used in determining the costs and charges to be paid has been held not improper where, in fixing the minimum charge, consideration is given to the daily sewage flow, the population ratio between the two cities, and the cost of the disposal plant in the city whose sewer system is to be used, and the method and measure followed are similar to those prescribed by statute for cities of more than a certain population.⁷⁵

Where a contract setting forth the mode of computing the charges is unambiguous, it must be given effect as written,⁷⁶ and the practical construction thereof by the parties is not controlling.⁷⁷

Under a statute providing that sewer rentals shall be apportioned equitably among the properties served, "equitably" confers an element of discretion in defining classes of patrons and of service and the rates payable by any class,⁷⁸ and "apportioned" implies the consideration of two or more relationships, not only as between classes but also between members of the same class,⁷⁹ and both words must also be construed with respect to the provision in the statute enabling the municipality to establish and operate the sewer system as a self-liquidating unit of municipal activity.⁸⁰ Under such statute, the charge must be in proportion to the extent or value of the use of the sewers,⁸¹ and a continuation of a traditional method of paying for tax service out of the general tax rate cannot be sustained, since it is inequitable to light users of the sewers.⁸² A sewer charge based on the water consumption of the property served as measured by the charges for water supplied has been held to be valid under such a statutory requirement,⁸³ even though such a charge may bear particularly heavy on certain industries.⁸⁴ On the other hand, under such a statute, a rate, or rate factor, based on the assessed valuation of the properties actually using the sewer system is invalid as a tax measured by such value without relation to such use,⁸⁵ and cannot be justified on the theory that the value of the use is different from the extent of the use, in the absence of a showing of any relation either between the value of the use and the cost of installation or between the cost of installation and the assessed value of the property served.⁸⁶

(3) Persons Liable

Unless an ordinance provides otherwise, a sewer service charge falls on the tenant using the sewer, and the cost of connection on the owner of the premises making a permanent improvement thereto. In particular circumstances, a vendor, and not the purchasers, of lots has been held liable for the cost of connection.

Metered and nonmetered properties

Gericke v. City of Philadelphia, 44 A.2d 233, 353 Pa. 60.

Special rates for certain institutions

The provision of special rates for charitable institutions, public and private schools, etc., based on their water charges under separate ordinances fixing such charges, whatever effect might be if separately challenged in proper proceeding, could not be made the basis of striking down the whole ordinance.—Gericke v. City of Philadelphia, 44 A.2d 233, 353 Pa. 60.

85. Pa.—In re City of Philadelphia, 21 A.2d 876, 343 Pa. 47.

Varying cost of furnishing and maintaining sewers

The fact that cost of furnishing and maintaining sewers is greater in sections of city wherein property values are higher than in other sections does not validate rental rate based on assessed valuation of properties served, particularly in absence of evidence as to conditions when existing sewers were installed and in view of resulting sewer rental charges of different multiples of water rent against different buildings in same sections of city.—In re City of Philadelphia, supra.

Higher assessment of corner dwellings does not justify imposition of higher sewer rental.—In re City of Philadelphia, supra.

Practical basis

A rate so based has been held not justified on the ground that there is no method of charging for sewer service which can be exactly equitable to every owner and that a practical basis must be used.—In re City of Philadelphia, supra.

Type of sewage

The fact that cost of sewage disposal for any property depends on type of sewage, as well as quantity thereof, does not authorize imposition of rental rate based on assessed valuation of property served, as such value has no relation to type of sewage.—In re City of Philadelphia, supra.

Urgency of city's sewage disposal problem does not justify such a charge.—In re City of Philadelphia, supra.

86. Pa.—In re City of Philadelphia, supra.

Unless an ordinance is clear to the contrary,⁸⁷ a sewer service charge falls on the tenant making use of the service,⁸⁸ while the cost of connection falls on the owner of the premises making a permanent improvement thereto.⁸⁹ A vendor, and not the purchasers, of lots sold on the mutual assumption of an existing sewer connection has been held properly charged with the cost of the connection.⁹⁰ A city acquiring land has been held bound by a provision in a prior deed that the grantors and their successors should not be obligated to pay for the use of a sewer.⁹¹

An agreement that the vendor of a sewer system to a town would pay the town a proportion of the cost of operating a purification plant based on the volume of sewage delivered by the vendor and another has been held not a guaranty by the vendor of payment by such other, but a direct promise by the vendor without the necessity that the town first seek payment from such other.⁹²

(4) Actions and Remedies

General rules governing civil actions and remedies apply to the recovery by a municipal corporation of charges for the use of its sewers, or to recover such charges which are alleged to have been illegally exacted.

Under an ordinance requiring property owners to make physical connection with a municipal sewer system, the municipal corporation may sue in assumpsit for the connection expense incurred on default of a property owner.⁹³ The usual rules as to parties⁹⁴ and evidence⁹⁵ apply in an action by a municipal corporation to recover sewer charges.

An action to recover from the municipality sewerage charges alleged to have been illegally exacted must be brought by a proper party⁹⁶ within the time limited by statute,⁹⁷ and in such an action the usual rules of evidence apply.⁹⁸

§ 1806. Private Sewers and Drains

- a. In general
- b. Acquisition by municipality
- c. Charges and compensation
- d. Actions

a. In General

As far as the public necessities require, a municipal corporation may reasonably regulate the use of private sewers and drains; and it may permit or prevent the use of the space below the surface of its streets for such purposes. An individual constructing a sewer or drain in a public street may or may not, according to circumstances, have the right to the exclusive use thereof.

In the exercise of its control of the space below the surface of the street, a municipal corporation may prevent its use for private drains or sewers,⁹⁹ or, in proper circumstances, may remove such a sewer,¹ as where it is so located as to interfere with the paving or macadamizing of the street or the erection of a curb.² On the other hand, a municipality may permit an individual or corporation to construct, under proper circumstances and restrictions, a private drain or sewer in its streets,³ without the consent of the abutting owner;⁴ and a license for this purpose is usually revocable,⁵ but the right to construct a private sewer may be so granted as to give the owner a vested right therein which the city cannot revoke.⁶ It is sometimes,⁷ although not always,⁸ held that a private drain or sewer constructed by an individual in a public street is his private property, and that he has a right to the exclusive use of it,⁹ unless the municipality has reserved a right to use it,¹⁰ or provision has been made by the municipality¹¹ or the person constructing the sewer¹² for the making of connections therewith by other persons, on the payment of a fee or charge,¹³ or unless the owner grants the municipality the privilege of connecting with the sewer.¹⁴ Where a drain or sewer has been constructed or maintained by an individual on his own initiative and it has never been accepted or taken over by the municipality, he alone is liable for the cost of its construction.¹⁵

While the owners of a ditch or sewer cannot compel the municipality to assume jurisdiction to control and regulate it,¹⁶ and a municipality has no duty to maintain a private drain¹⁷ or to keep it unobstructed,¹⁸ the municipality may, in so far as the public necessities require, regulate the use of private drains, ditches, and sewers;¹⁹ but the power of regulation should be reasonably exercised²⁰ and private rights should not be invaded or impaired unless the public welfare and safety demand it,²¹ and then no further than the circumstances require.²² Under the authority conferred by some statutes, a court may compel the operation of a plant for pumping sewage from a private system into the municipal system²³ until such time as municipal sewers are extended to the locality.²⁴

The operators of a sewer system, having assumed the duties and obligations of a public utility, have a right to discontinue operation,²⁵ but not without giving patrons a reasonable time, or a sufficient period, within which to provide themselves with such services or a substitute therefor.²⁶

In private dwellings or buildings. Regulations of methods and devices for the conveyance of sewage from private dwellings are recognized as an exercise of that branch of the police power which pertains to the public health.²⁷ A municipality may require that permits for the installation of sewerage systems in private dwellings be obtained²⁸ and may confer the power to grant such permits on designated boards,²⁹ since such delegation is not a grant of power to legislate.³⁰ Under some building codes, a building inspector may permit the construction of a drainage system for roof water, wholly separate from the sewerage system of the building.³¹

b. Acquisition by Municipality

A private sewer or drain may be acquired by a municipal corporation in the same manner as property generally.

A drain or sewer constructed by private persons may pass to the public by dedication and acceptance,³² or it may pass to the municipal corporation by deed;³³ but the administrative officers of a municipality have no authority to convert a private drain into a public one without acquiring the property on which the drain is located.³⁴

A city possessing power to construct a sewer has authority to purchase a sewer which has been previously constructed by an individual with its permission and which can be used for public purposes as a public sewer.³⁵ However, a municipality is not required to acquire or take over a drain or sewer unless it is so provided by statute;³⁶ where it does acquire or take over a private sewer³⁷ or the property of a sewer company,³⁸ it must, of course, compensate the owner for the value thereof.

c. Charges and Compensation

A municipal corporation may have a contract right to fix or regulate the rates to be charged by a sewerage company. General rules governing the determination of rates and charges for public utility services have been applied to rates and charges for the use of private sewers, or for the services of sewerage companies, in municipalities.

A municipal corporation may have a contract right to fix or regulate the rates to be charged by a sewerage company,³⁹ even though it may not have charter power to do so;⁴⁰ but the fact that a municipality prescribes maximum rates as a condition of its consent to the exercise of rights granted directly by the legislature to a sewerage company does not prevent the legislature from subsequently conferring power on a public utility commission to regulate the rates to be charged by the company.⁴¹ A statute may prohibit sewerage corporations from granting free service to any patron,⁴² regardless of existing contracts to the contrary.⁴³

Compensation for storm sewer services rendered by a utility company to a community cannot be claimed on the basis of full and exclusive ownership of the storm sewer system when the circumstances show a partial ownership in the community;⁴⁴ nor can recovery be had against a municipality for such services on the basis of quasi contract or contract implied in fact, where the services were rendered in plaintiff's own interest and without expectation of reward.⁴⁵ Likewise, with respect to asserted ownership and the right to demand compensation, a conveyance of a "disposal plant and sewage system" has been held not to include a storm water system,⁴⁶ and a conveyance of a "sewerage

In proceedings by a public utility commission inquiring into the fairness and reasonableness of rates charged by a sewerage company, the commission has been held to have statutory authority to compel the company to correct its patron ledger and to revise its system of notation therein so that it might in the future properly reflect the company's transactions.⁴⁹

Where no written notice to clean privy vaults is given a property owner by a city health department, as required by ordinance, a licensed scavenger is not entitled to recovery against the owner for cleaning the vaults, where the owner did not employ him or consent to his doing the work.⁵⁰

Determination of rates and charges. In the absence of legislation fixing maximum charges,⁵¹ a court has power to determine what is a reasonable charge for a connection with,⁵² or the use of,⁵³ a private sewer in a municipality, but it may not prescribe the rates to be charged in the future⁵⁴ or

A sewer company providing service in a municipality is entitled to earn a sufficient sum annually to provide not only for current repairs, but for making good depreciation and replacing parts of the property when they come to the end of their life, and to pay a fair return on capital judiciously expended in the construction of the plant.⁵⁶ In determining the value of the plant or property, the reasonable value at the time it is being used for the public service is the basis for determining whether rates fixed are reasonable;⁵⁷ the investment on which the company is entitled to base its compensation, in determining the sufficiency of rates, cannot include property not at present actually employed,⁵⁸ and not reasonably proper and necessary for the service to be performed.⁵⁹ The value of personal property should be considered if it represents an investment reasonably necessary for the successful carrying on of the business.⁶⁰ So, as a general rule of law, a sewer company is entitled to charge and collect a rate that will pay the cost of operation and provide for upkeep, for depreciation and replacements, and for a reasonable return on the investment.⁶¹

Where a utility commission fixes a rate base and prescribes the gross annual revenue for a sewerage company, and approves a schedule prepared by the company, the rates prescribed are "commission

d. Actions

General rules governing actions in civil cases have been applied in actions involving private sewers in municipal corporations.

An action in assumpsit at common law does not lie to recover for the use of a private sewer where a statute provides for the determination by the municipal officers of the amount to be paid.⁶⁶

One who is not the owner of a sewer installed in a street cannot maintain an action to enjoin an abutting property owner from connecting therewith.⁶⁷ An action involving private sewers must be timely brought,⁶⁸ and in such an action the rights of persons not made parties may not be adjudicated,⁶⁹ and the usual rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence apply.⁷⁰ A court will not enjoin a connection with a private sewer on the ground that the sewer will be overloaded thereby where the evidence is insufficient to show that such result will follow.⁷¹

A schedule prepared by accountants of a public service commission after examination of the books of a sewerage company, in proceedings inquiring into the fairness and reasonableness of its rates, has been held to afford sufficient evidence for the commission to find patrons entitled to, and the amount of, reparations sought.⁷²

§ 1807. Natural Watercourses

a. In general

b. Use for drainage or sewerage purposes

a. In General

Riparian owners may use a natural watercourse running through a municipal corporation, if not navigable water, for any legitimate purpose not affecting the rights of other such owners or creating a nuisance. Unless it has a statutory right of control, a municipal corporation cannot control a natural watercourse which is not a sewer, except as health measures or the protection of streets require; and it has no right to divert water from such a stream to the detriment of lower proprietors.

Natural watercourses running through a municipal corporation, if not navigable waters, belong to the riparian owners⁷³ who may use them for any legitimate purpose which will not affect the rights of other riparian owners⁷⁴ or create a nuisance,⁷⁵

although they have no right to obstruct such streams so as to overflow or damage other property⁷⁶ or create a nuisance.⁷⁷ Where a natural watercourse is not a sewer, the municipality has no control over it except the power to keep it cleaned out as a health measure,⁷⁸ and prevent its being obstructed so as to overflow or injure the public streets,⁷⁹ unless the power of control is conferred by statute,⁸⁰ or the city has acquired, by condemnation proceedings, a right of way for a new channel of the stream.⁸¹ It has no right to divert water from such a stream to the detriment of lower proprietors,⁸² or so to exercise a power of control conferred by its charter as to deprive persons who have acquired a vested water right in the stream of their property without due process of law;⁸³ nor can it compel one landowner to remove an obstruction from the stream merely on the ground of protecting the property of another landowner.⁸⁴

A municipal corporation, having acquired land outside its boundaries and impounded thereon the waters of a nonnavigable stream to provide a water supply, has the same right as a private riparian owner to forbid any person to enter on such impounded waters without a permit,⁸⁵ and the public has no fishing rights in such waters.⁸⁶

b. Use for Drainage or Sewerage Purposes

While, in general, a municipal corporation has a right to use for sewerage and drainage any natural channel for the flow of water, the state may regulate or prohibit the discharge of municipal sewage into a stream which is a source of water supply. The validity of an ordinance prohibiting the discharge of sewage into a river within the jurisdiction of a municipal corporation has been upheld as a health measure.

In general, a municipal corporation has a right to use for sewerage and drainage purposes any natural channel for the flow of water,⁸⁷ and it may exercise this right without incurring liability to keep the channel open to its mouth,⁸⁸ even though the state or the owners of the lots through which it passes have made an artificial and covered substitute in place of the natural channel.⁸⁹ So, a municipality may utilize for drainage a creek running through its borders,⁹⁰ and, under a power to drain and repair, may straighten it to conform to the direction of streets.⁹¹ A proviso that a statute relating to the construction of drains as an inlet or outlet into or out of the municipality shall be liberally construed justifies the diversion of a natural watercourse for such purposes.⁹²

In the interest of the public health and safety, the state may regulate⁹³ or, if necessary, prohibit⁹⁴ the discharge of municipal sewage into a river or stream which is a source of water supply; and, as against the state, a municipality can acquire no prescriptive right to discharge its sewage into a river.⁹⁵ On the other hand, the legislature may authorize a municipality to use tidal streams below high-water level as an outlet for sewers;⁹⁶ and a statute forbidding the discharge of sewage or refuse into, or the placing of sewage or refuse on the banks of, a river which furnishes the public water supply of any municipality may expressly exempt from the operation of its provisions such mumunicipalities as, at the date of the passage of the act, have a public sewer or system of sewers, legally constructed under municipal authority, discharging its drainage or sewage into the river.⁹⁷ The right of a municipal corporation to empty its sewage into a stream or river has been held to be merely a legislative license,⁹⁸ revocable whenever the public health and safety require.⁹⁹

Where a municipality which has adopted a natural watercourse for drainage purposes changes its course and permits a landowner for a consideration to fill up the abandoned channel, it cannot subsequently reopen it without instituting proceedings de novo for the condemnation of the property.¹ The owner of a water privilege for manufacturing purposes on a stream in a city has been held to have no usufructuary right in the sewage of the city which has been discharged into a stream above his property,² and cannot prevent the city from diverting it elsewhere.³

After water which has been diverted from a stream for sewerage purposes has been returned thereto, it becomes a part of the water of the state,⁴ and a municipal contract purporting to grant the exclusive right to divert the sewage from the stream cannot be sustained.⁵ However, by reason of the public necessity of disposing of city sewage,⁶ a municipal contract for the discharge of sewage on another's land, which grants the owner of the land the exclusive use of such sewage, will be upheld as against a claim that, as soon as the sewage became surplusage and waste water and started on its return to the stream from which it had previously been diverted, it became part of the public waters.⁷

A municipality has no right to authorize a person to construct a private sewer discharging into an open watercourse which is not a public sewer so as to create a nuisance.⁸ An ordinance prohibiting the discharge of sewage into a river within the jurisdiction of a municipality has been held a valid exercise of the statutory power of the municipality to enact ordinances for the promotion of the health of the community;⁹ as such, its enforcement will not be specialized by the compulsion of a court of equity.¹⁰

A statute providing that navigable waters within the state shall be common highways has been held not to give a municipality on a navigable stream the same rights in the expenditure of public funds for the improvement thereof as it would have in improving highways.¹¹

C. PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Municipal corporations may ordinarily, under their charter provisions, regulate and control the use of their public buildings, but they may not appropriate public buildings to other than a public use without special legislative sanction.

might provide buildings,¹³ at least until the property is permanently dedicated to a particular public use,¹⁴ and although a building was erected or acquired primarily for a special purpose it may be used incidentally for other municipal purposes not exclusive of the primary use.¹⁵ On the other hand, public buildings ordinarily are held for public use, and a municipal corporation has no proprietary rights in the buildings distinct from its trust for the public.¹⁶ So a municipality cannot appropriate public buildings to other than a public use without special legislative sanction,¹⁷ and it may be without power to use public buildings to carry on a private business for profit.¹⁸ A private citizen has the right to enter a public building for a lawful purpose and in a lawful manner.¹⁹

A municipality may lease a private building for public use,²⁰ but such a contract or lease must be made in compliance with statutory requirements,²¹ after proper authorization by municipal officers.²² Municipal corporations are in some cases authorized by statute to use certain county buildings, such as jails or courthouses,²³ or to execute to the state a penal bond conditioned to build and keep them in repair.²⁴ Some statutes vest the care and management of a public building, which is both a city and county building, in a board of trustees;²⁵ but, in the absence of charter or statutory authority, a combined city and county government is without power to turn over the control and management of a public building to a board of trustees, a majority of whom it does not select.²⁶

Sale. A municipal corporation may sometimes have the power to sell a public building which is no longer needed for public use,²⁷ but the sale may be made only by an officer or body authorized to do so,²⁸ and a municipality has been held to have no power to sell its town hall in the absence of express legislative grant, where there was continued need for the hall and a new one was not to be established.²⁹ A court cannot interfere with the right of a purchaser of a public building sold pursuant to advertisement by the city council to handle and dispose of the property as it desires.³⁰

§ 1809. Use or Lease for Private Purposes

Generally a municipal corporation may either gratuitously or for compensation permit buildings erected for a municipal purpose to be used incidentally for law-

Hospital

(1) A city's lease of its hospital property and equipment to nonprofit hospital corporation, rendering hospital services in city's behalf without compensation or remuneration, except for necessary outlays in operation of hospital, was not unconstitutional as grant or loan of city's credit.—South Side Dist. Hospital v. Hartman, 153 P.2d 537, 62 Ariz. 67.

(2) Authorization by city voters of bond issue to provide funds for purchase and equipment of hospital did not warrant leasing of hospital even if voters were advised of contemplated leasing, when single question of bond issue was presented to them and the hospital could not be leased unless authorized by a majority of the qualified voters at an election called for that purpose.—Lewis v. (2) Act giving cities power to own and operate hospitals and to lease them to domestic nonprofit associations or corporations, and validating cities' ownership, operation, and leasing of hospitals before act took effect, is valid.—South Side Dist. Hospital v. Hartman, supra.

Relationship of parties

The relationship existing between a city and an individual to whom, or organization to which, the city has leased its municipal auditorium or a part thereof during a time when the auditorium is not being used by the city for purely civic matters is that of landlord and tenant.—Harris v. City of St. Louis, 111 S.W.2d 995, 233 Mo.App. 911.

Increase of minimum rental

Annual sewer rental, imposed by city ordinance on city as owner of leased premises in trust, was within term "taxes or charges of like nature which may be imposed on premises," in provision of lease for increase or decrease of minimum rental as total sum of such taxes or charges increased or decreased, in view of tenant's payment of sewer rental charges in form of general taxes before passage of ordinance.—City of Philadelphia v. Profit-making events

City held authorized to rent its

of is not presently needed for municipal purposes,³⁷ and, in case of a lease or sublease of a portion of the building, its use by the lessee or sublessee will not interfere with the proper use of the remainder of the building by the municipality.³⁸ Under some statutes, however, a municipality may be denied the power to lease certain public buildings for private use,³⁹ and a statute authorizing the lease of certain buildings has been held not to authorize the leasing of premises for conducting a purely commercial enterprise.⁴⁰

Where a municipality has the power to lease its property to others, it has the incidental power to grant an option to lease⁴¹ or to provide in the lease that it will refund to the lessee on the termination of the lease the value of permanent improvements placed on the property by him.⁴² A city, like any other landlord, may agree to furnish electric power to tenants in connection with a lease of city-owned premises.⁴³ Statutory regulations as to the mode of exercising the power to lease must be observed;⁴⁴ and, where the lease was procured by fraud, it may be set aside by the courts.⁴⁵ A legislative prohibition of a lease of property already under lease means that the city shall not execute two leases covering the same property for the same period of time;⁴⁶ it does not prevent the city from renewing a lease before its expiration.⁴⁷ The repeal of a statute granting to a board of trustees power to lease a particular building indicates an intention on the part of the legislature to deny to the board of trustees the power to lease the building or any part of it.⁴⁸

Refusal to lease. Municipal authorities empowered to lease a public building are not charged with an absolute duty of letting to all applicants;⁴⁹ they are vested with judgment and discretion in the matter,⁵⁰ and their exercise of this discretion will not be interfered with by the courts in the absence of a plain case of abuse of discretion.⁵¹

Tenancy at will. An agreement between a city and an individual that he shall act as watchman and caretaker of certain city property, move into the house thereon, and put and keep it and other improvements on the property in repair, creates the relationship of landlord and tenant, not of employer and employee;⁵² and, the tenancy being one at will, it may be terminated on demand by the city

Collection of rent. The state tax collector may have authority to maintain suit to collect, on behalf of a municipal corporation, indebtedness due under a contract for rental of municipal warehouses.⁵⁵

D. MEANS OF PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION AND COMMUNICATION

§ 1810. Transportation

A municipal corporation may exercise all the ordinary rights of proprietorship in a line of railroad constructed by it under legislative authority, and it may sell such property as is not needed for transportation purposes.

Where a municipal corporation has by legislative authority constructed a line of railroad which is an independent road and its exclusive property, it may exercise all the ordinary rights of proprietorship therein.⁵⁶ A municipality may be authorized to convey land to a railroad for a freight depot,⁵⁷ but land deeded to a municipality for a special purpose may not be transferred by it to a railroad for other purposes.⁵⁸ A municipal corporation, after construction of transportation facilities, may sell such property as is not necessary for transportation purposes.⁵⁹ The legality of contractual provisions in connection with construction and operation of a railroad passenger terminal which made bonds issued by the city payable out of revenues from the terminal, which exempted the terminal from taxation, which postponed the obligation of the railroads to pay rent for the use of the terminal, and which fixed the final maturity of date for the bonds, could not be questioned where such provisions were specifically authorized by a constitutional amendment permitting the city to construct and operate railroad passenger stations.⁶⁰ Matters of rapid transit affecting a certain city are not exclusively of city concern, but the state legislature is still empowered to act in such matters.⁶¹

§ 1811. Communication; Radio Broadcasting

The use of a municipally owned radio broadcasting station for other than strictly departmental business is not necessarily unlawful, and municipal authorities may exercise some discretion in deciding what shall be broadcast.

A municipal corporation has power to construct and maintain a radio broadcasting station for the use of the various departments of the city government in the conduct of the business of the municipality, as discussed supra § 1054, and the use of the station for other than strictly departmental business is not necessarily unlawful.⁶² As long as the use made of the station is within that authorized by the proper board, there can be no judicial interference with the exercise of the discretion of the municipal authorities in deciding what shall be broadcast.⁶³ However, there are limits to the proper use of the station;⁶⁴ the use actually made

E. WATER FRONTAGE, LANDINGS, DOCKS, AND WHARVES

Although in the absence of a statutory grant of power a municipal corporation has no control over navigable waters, it may exercise power delegated to it by the state to control water frontage and submerged lands under navigable waters, within certain limitations, and to control and regulate the construction, maintenance, and use of landing places, wharves, docks, and piers within the corporate limits.

Although in the absence of a statutory grant of power a municipal corporation has no control over navigable waters,⁶⁸ the state may delegate its public trusts with respect to the control of water frontage and submerged lands under navigable waters to a municipal corporation, which may then exercise control over such waters,⁶⁹ subject to the paramount authority of the federal government over interstate and foreign commerce,⁷⁰ and subject to revocation by the state of any merely administrative powers delegated by it.⁷¹ So a municipality, in order to secure the orderly use of public waters, may ordain where, when, and how the several uses of which such waters are susceptible shall be enjoyed,⁷² and the use of water of a lake as a source of water supply for the inhabitants of the city and for water storage as a part of the city waterworks system is a use for a public purpose which the city is authorized to make.⁷³ Also a city may have the power to establish a line of mean high water⁷⁴ or to establish divisional lines in waters between areas in which its riparian rights as owner of land fronting on such waters and those of owners of other such lands may be exercised;⁷⁵ and a municipal corporation which owns land fronting on a navigable river has power to make an agreement, binding on it and the owner of adjoining land, as to the division of riparian rights between them.⁷⁶

The state may delegate the supervision of public wharves to the city within whose limits they are located;⁷⁷ and when duly authorized by charter or statute a municipal corporation may control and regulate the construction, maintenance, and use of landing places, wharves, docks, and piers within the corporate limits,⁷⁸ and require all vessels to land

Paramount duty

It is city government's paramount duty zealously to guard public interest, unhampered by private contracts which may hinder its control of or impair full beneficial use of its harbor, ports, waterways, and tidelands held by it in trust for promotion and improvement of navigation and commerce.—Board of Port Com'rs of

City of Oakland v. Williams, 70 P.2d 918, 9 Cal.2d 381.

Access to harbor

City, holding title to tide and submerged lands for park and playground purposes and structures promoting commerce and navigation, may cut off portions from access to harbor in aid of fishing and navigation.—Los Angeles Athletic Club v. City of Long Beach, 17 P.2d 1061, 128 Cal.App. 427.

Definition of riparian rights

An exercise of regulatory power, conferred on city by its charter, to establish lines of improvements in waters of river, is essential to definition of riparian rights of owners of adjoining lands fronting on such river.—Mayor and City Council of Baltimore v. Crown Cork & Seal Co., C.C.A.Md., 122 F.2d 385.

at its wharves and landings⁷⁹ and pay reasonable wharfage, as discussed infra § 1814. However, the charter or statute is the measure of the municipality's authority,⁸⁰ and compliance must be had with any provisions as to how the rights conferred shall be exercised.⁸¹ The municipality must also exercise its powers with due regard to the private rights of littoral or riparian proprietors,⁸² and of the proprietors of private wharves⁸³ and ferries;⁸⁴ and power to establish dock and wharf lines and to restrain encroachments and prevent obstructions to navigation does not authorize a municipality to declare a structure a nuisance which in fact is not a nuisance⁸⁵ or to prohibit the erection of warehouses or other appropriate structures upon private wharves above high-water level.⁸⁶

Sometimes a duty to regulate is imposed by statute on a municipality.⁸⁷ However, the exercise of a legislative grant of power to a municipality to make improvements in its water fronts or harbor is not obligatory but optional,⁸⁸ and the probability that the municipality may at some future time condemn certain property for public purposes is no ground for enjoining the owner from constructing a permanent improvement thereon.⁸⁹ Where a municipality has built and maintained a public wharf or landing place, private citizens have the right to use such wharf or landing place on compliance with appropriate regulations,⁹⁰ but, if a common or public landing has not been established in the manner required by statute, the acquisition of wharf property by a municipality does not give every individual a right to dock his vessel at the wharf.⁹¹

Discontinuance or abandonment of wharf or landing place. A public utility, such as a city-owned wharf, may in some circumstances be abandoned,⁹² but an abandonment which has the appearance of having been made to circumvent the statutes relating to sale or lease of utilities by municipal corporations has been held to be of doubtful legality.⁹³ A municipal corporation is not authorized to discontinue a public landing place under authority to discontinue a way.⁹⁴

Filling in submerged land. A municipality may have power to authorize or direct the filling in of land under water which has been granted to it by the state,⁹⁵ but in the absence of statutory authorization, the rule is otherwise as to land belonging to the state.⁹⁶

Relation to streets. A public street leading to navigable waters will keep even pace with the extension of the land,⁹⁷ whether the change in the land is due to natural causes⁹⁸ or to the voluntary act of the owner of the land.⁹⁹ However, the charter power of a municipality to lay out streets does not include power to lay out streets over navigable waters;¹ and a street terminating in a road which follows the line of the shore and comes in contact with the water at intervals does not constructively extend into the water.² A public landing, wharf, or pier may be a street³ or a part⁴ or extension⁵ thereof, and where it connects with a public street it may be a public highway;⁶ but it has been held that a county wharf is not a continuation of a street,⁷ and that the charter or statutory power of a municipality to abolish or vacate streets and highways does not include power to vacate a wharf or landing⁸ or to abolish the right of the public therein.⁹

Foreign trade zone. A municipal corporation may have authority to operate and maintain, under federal grant, a foreign trade zone adjacent to its water front.¹⁰

§ 1813. Powers of Particular Officers or Boards

Particular officers, boards, or commissioners invested with the regulation and control of the public water front, docks, wharves, and piers cannot exceed the powers which are conferred on them by statutory or charter provisions.

The powers of particular officers, boards, or commissioners invested with the regulation and control of the public water front, docks, wharves, and piers ordinarily are regulated by statutory or charter provisions.¹¹ Such officers cannot exceed the powers which are conferred on them;¹² and, where the statute is not imperative but permissive, their discretion must be exercised with due regard to private rights.¹³ Any person seeking privileges from the municipality with respect to such property must see to it that he obtains them from the proper source.¹⁴

The annual appropriation and payment of money by a city to a port commission to finance a pier owned by the city and operated by the commission is a payment to a public body or agency for a public purpose and a contract providing therefor is neither ultra vires nor unconstitutional.¹⁵ Where a municipality contracts with an independent governmental agency for the latter's operation of a municipally owned pier, the agency's rights and duties with respect to the income from the pier are limited by the terms of the contract.¹⁶ The city may not complain of the commission's breach of duty in operating a competing pier owned by it, where the city previously knew of, and consented to, such operation,¹⁷ and the city may not complain of any commingling of funds by the commission in the absence of any loss and of the availability of funds held for the city's account.¹⁸ In an action by the city against the commission for rescission of the contract and for an accounting, the court may determine defendant's counterclaim in order to give complete relief and allow the

§ 1814. Wharfage and Other Charges

Municipal corporations may under statutory or charter authority fix the rate of wharfage, dockage, and landing, or the charge to be imposed for the use of publicly operated terminals, but the rate or charge must be reasonable and the provisions of the statute as to the manner of exercising the power to fix the rate or charge must be followed.

Municipal corporations may under express statutory or charter authority fix the rate of wharfage, dockage, and landing,²⁰ or the charge to be imposed for the use of publicly operated terminals;²¹ but unless authorized by charter or statute²² a municipal corporation has no right to exact and collect wharfage for the use of a public wharf,²³ and, where such authority is granted and the manner of its exercise prescribed, the provisions of the statute must be followed.²⁴ Although a municipality is authorized to collect wharfage, it will be presumed that a public wharf is to be used free of charge in the absence of any ordinance to the contrary,²⁵ and ordinances regulating wharfage are to be strictly construed.²⁶

A municipality cannot, under the guise of its authority to collect wharfage, levy any tax or duty of tonnage,²⁷ or charge for entering or leaving the port or remaining therein without regard to the place of mooring or landing,²⁸ or collect wharfage where no wharfage facilities are in fact furnished or used.²⁹ The municipality may, however, where it owns and maintains the wharves, docks, and other water-front facilities, charge such reasonable fees as will fairly remunerate it for the use of its property;³⁰ and the determination of the amount of the charge to be imposed for the use of water-front facilities ordinarily is within the discretion of the municipality,³¹ subject to statutory provisions prohibiting discriminatory rates and requiring the establishment of reasonable rates and regulations.³² The fact that the charges for what are properly wharfage facilities actually furnished are fixed on a tonnage basis will not constitute them a tonnage tax within the prohibition of the federal Constitution.³³ The persons paying reasonable charges have no legal concern as to how they are expended by the municipality.³⁴ It has been held to be the better practice for the municipality to segregate the earnings of a public wharf and pay the costs of operation and maintenance therefrom, rather than to deposit such earnings in the general fund.³⁵

Private wharves, piers, or docks. Wharf owners have the exclusive power to impose and collect wharfage at private wharves,³⁶ and they do not forfeit their right to wharfage by dedicating a part of the wharf space to street purposes.³⁷ A municipality has been held to have no power to exact minor privilege charges from a landowner for piers or docks built into navigable waters in front of the land owned by the landowner, where such power has not been granted to it by statute or charter,³⁸ and a city may not, under the guise of its regulatory authority, exact rent from the owner of land under water on which such owner intends to build a pier.³⁹

§ 1815. Sales, Leases, and Grants

- a. In general
- b. Mode of letting or confirming
- c. Termination and holding over
- d. Construction, operation, and effect

a. In General

The powers of a municipal corporation with respect to the making of leases or grants of franchises or privileges pertaining to the public water front, wharves, and piers depend on the authority conferred by statutory or charter provisions, and in exercising such powers the municipality must conform to any limitations or restrictions imposed.

The powers of a municipal corporation with respect to the making of leases or grants of franchises and privileges depend on whether it is invested with the whole power of disposing of water fronts, docks, and wharves or merely a limited right respecting such property.⁴⁰ While it has been held that a municipal corporation holds its public water front or wharves as it does its streets, and that it has no power to sell or lease them to private persons in the absence of special statutory authority,⁴¹ municipalities may be⁴² and frequently are⁴³ authorized by charter or statutory provisions to make leases or grants of certain franchises or privileges pertaining to the public water front, wharves, and piers.

So a city may lease tidelands to an individual to erect a private wharf,⁴⁴ or refuse to lease its submerged lands for such a purpose⁴⁵ except under conditions, limitations, and restrictions deemed most beneficial to the navigation and use of the port of the city;⁴⁶ and the owner of property abutting on navigable water may not wharf out or build on submerged lands which are the property of the state, for which the city is the agent, without a license, grant, lease, franchise, or some form of governmental permission.⁴⁷ However, municipalities must conform to any limitations or restrictions in the statute from which their powers are derived,⁴⁸ as, for example, a requirement that the lease be secured by a bond;⁴⁹ and they cannot make any lease or grant⁵⁰ or authorize any use⁵¹ or erection,⁵² which is prohibited by charter or statute.

Ordinarily a lease or grant by a municipality of a franchise or privilege pertaining to the public water front, wharves, docks, or piers is valid when, and only when, it is temporary or for a limited period of time,⁵³ not exceeding the term permitted by statute,⁵⁴ and is supported by a valid and sufficient consideration.⁵⁵ It is also ordinarily a requisite of a valid grant or lease of publicly owned water front rights or facilities that the municipality reserve the right to resume possession,⁵⁶ but it has been held that port property held in a proprietary capacity and not dedicated to a public use may be sold absolutely where it is no longer adapted to the purpose for which it was originally intended.⁵⁷ Generally, a lease or grant is valid only when exclusive rights are not granted to individuals,⁵⁸ and the municipality reserves or does not abandon or delegate to individuals its right of regulation and control.⁵⁹ It has been held, however, that a lease may grant a preferential right to the use of a public wharf or dock,⁶⁰ that statutes pertaining to

the leasing of public levees may authorize the lease of all of an improved public levee to one tenant or the lease of different parts to different tenants,⁶¹ and that the lease of a water-front warehouse for the exclusive use of a single individual is not objectionable where such warehouse is but a unit of a comprehensive plan of harbor improvement available generally for public use.⁶²

It has further been held that a lease or grant of water front rights or facilities is valid when, and only when, the use or improvement permitted is of a public character,⁶³ consistent with the nature and purposes of the property and the objects for which it was acquired or dedicated,⁶⁴ and will not constitute a purpresture or public nuisance,⁶⁵ or obstruct or interfere with navigation or commerce⁶⁶ or the rights of the public.⁶⁷ A contract granting the right to use a public wharf may provide for the arbitration of disputes arising thereunder,⁶⁸ and for defense by the city at its own expense of any suit attacking the validity of the contract.⁶⁹

Wharfage. Unless so empowered by charter or statute,⁷⁰ a municipality cannot delegate to a lessee or other individual or private corporation its power to collect wharfage or other charges,⁷¹ and fix the rates therefor;⁷² on making a lease or grant of a portion of a wharf to private persons

Sublease. Where, in order to obtain a lease of a wharf, it is necessary for the municipal corporation to take a lease of other property also, but it has no use for the latter property, it may sublease it.⁷⁴

Operation of foreign trade zone. The power of a municipality to operate and maintain a foreign trade zone under a federal grant obtained from a federal agency does not carry with it as incidental a concomitant right to operate the zone through the medium of a contract with a private corporation, resulting in a lease of public property held by the city for public use, and its diversion to a possession or use exclusively private, for private business purposes,⁷⁵ and such a lease is invalid in the absence of special statutory authorization therefor.⁷⁶ Under statutes relating to the use of terminal facilities, however, private operation of such a zone under contract with the city is permissible under express conditions,⁷⁷ and such a contract does not constitute a transfer of the federal grant to operate the zone prohibited by federal law;⁷⁸ but even under these statutes the operating contract will be considered invalid if it imposes no obligation on the private organization of providing equipment, but obligates the city to furnish all equipment.⁷⁹ An invalid contract may be attacked by action in a state court.⁸⁰

A municipal corporation must comply with all statutory requirements with respect to the mode of leasing or granting water-front rights or facilities.

A municipal corporation must comply with all statutory requirements with respect to the mode of leasing or granting water-front rights or facilities.⁸¹ Under some,⁸² but not other,⁸³ charter or statutory provisions, a lease of a public water front, dock, or wharf, or the sale of a right or privilege to occupy a portion thereof, by a municipality must be made publicly to the highest responsible bidder. Also under some statutes confirmation by the city is essential to the validity of a wharf franchise granted by a state board;⁸⁴ but the city can only confirm or reject;⁸⁵ it cannot ratify on conditions,⁸⁶ and where it attempts to do so the confirmation will be deemed absolute and unconditioned.⁸⁷ Since a municipality, when its charter permits, may contract by ordinance, an ordinance granting wharf rights for a term of years may, if the parties so intend, constitute a lease, notwithstanding a statute requires the acknowledgment and recording of leases.⁸⁸ A lease of water-front rights has been sustained as against objections that the execution of the lease by city officials was fraudulent or an abuse of discretion,⁸⁹ or that there was a variation between the lease and the proposal submitted on behalf of the lessee.⁹⁰

c. Termination and Holding Over

A mere license to use a dock or wharf or to occupy part of the water front of a municipal corporation is revocable at the pleasure of the municipality provided the revocation is made in the manner prescribed by charter or statute; but rights under a valid lease terminate only at the expiration of the term or happening or performance of a condition specified in the lease as effecting a termination.

A mere license to use a dock or wharf,⁹¹ or to erect a shed or structure thereon not authorized by law,⁹² or to erect and maintain a shed during the pleasure of a named board,⁹³ or to occupy part of the water front of a municipal corporation,⁹⁴ or to control land under a river bank⁹⁵ is revocable at the pleasure of the municipal corporation. Where, however, the manner of revoking a license or permit is prescribed by charter or statute, a revocation, in order to be valid and effectual, must be made in the manner prescribed,⁹⁶ and the licensee is entitled to reasonable notice to vacate the premises on revocation of the permit.⁹⁷ It has also been held that, where a permit is revocable at the will of the municipality before its expiration date, municipal officers may not use the power of revocation in bad faith, arbitrarily, or capriciously;⁹⁸ and such a permit may not be canceled without notice or just cause.⁹⁹

the leasing of public levees may authorize the lease of all of an improved public levee to one tenant or the lease of different parts to different tenants,⁶¹ and that the lease of a water-front warehouse for the exclusive use of a single individual is not objectionable where such warehouse is but a unit of a comprehensive plan of harbor improvement available generally for public use.⁶²

It has further been held that a lease or grant of water front rights or facilities is valid when, and only when, the use or improvement permitted is of a public character,⁶³ consistent with the nature and purposes of the property and the objects for which it was acquired or dedicated,⁶⁴ and will not constitute a purpresture or public nuisance,⁶⁵ or obstruct or interfere with navigation or commerce⁶⁶ or the rights of the public.⁶⁷ A contract granting the right to use a public wharf may provide for the arbitration of disputes arising thereunder,⁶⁸ and for defense by the city at its own expense of any suit attacking the validity of the contract.⁶⁹

Wharfage. Unless so empowered by charter or statute,⁷⁰ a municipality cannot delegate to a lessee or other individual or private corporation its power to collect wharfage or other charges,⁷¹ and fix the rates therefor,⁷² on making a lease or grant of a portion of a wharf to private persons

Sublease. Where, in order to obtain a lease of a wharf, it is necessary for the municipal corporation to take a lease of other property also, but it has no use for the latter property, it may sublease it.⁷⁴

Operation of foreign trade zone. The power of a municipality to operate and maintain a foreign trade zone under a federal grant obtained from a federal agency does not carry with it as incidental a concomitant right to operate the zone through the medium of a contract with a private corporation, resulting in a lease of public property held by the city for public use, and its diversion to a possession or use exclusively private, for private business purposes,⁷⁵ and such a lease is invalid in the absence of special statutory authorization therefor.⁷⁶ Under statutes relating to the use of terminal facilities, however, private operation of such a zone under contract with the city is permissible under express conditions,⁷⁷ and such a contract does not constitute a transfer of the federal grant to operate the zone prohibited by federal law;⁷⁸ but even under these statutes the operating contract will be considered invalid if it imposes no obligation on the private organization of providing equipment, but obligates the city to furnish all equipment.⁷⁹ An invalid contract may be attacked by action in a state court.⁸⁰

A municipal corporation must comply with all statutory requirements with respect to the mode of leasing or granting water-front rights or facilities.

A municipal corporation must comply with all statutory requirements with respect to the mode of leasing or granting water-front rights or facilities.⁸¹ Under some,⁸² but not other,⁸³ charter or statutory provisions, a lease of a public water front, dock, or wharf, or the sale of a right or privilege to occupy a portion thereof, by a municipality must be made publicly to the highest responsible bidder. Also under some statutes confirmation by the city is essential to the validity of a wharf franchise granted by a state board;⁸⁴ but the city can only confirm or reject;⁸⁵ it cannot ratify on conditions,⁸⁶ and where it attempts to do so the confirmation will be deemed absolute and unconditioned.⁸⁷ Since a municipality, when its charter permits, may contract by ordinance, an ordinance granting wharf rights for a term of years may, if the parties so intend, constitute a lease, notwithstanding a statute requires the acknowledgment and recording of leases.⁸⁸ A lease of water-front rights has been sustained as against objections that the execution of the lease by city officials was fraudulent or an abuse of discretion,⁸⁹ or that there was a variation between the lease and the proposal submitted on behalf of the lessee.⁹⁰

c. Termination and Holding Over

A mere license to use a dock or wharf or to occupy part of the water front of a municipal corporation is revocable at the pleasure of the municipality provided the revocation is made in the manner prescribed by charter or statute; but rights under a valid lease terminate only at the expiration of the term or happening or performance of a condition specified in the lease as effecting a termination.

A mere license to use a dock or wharf,⁹¹ or to erect a shed or structure thereon not authorized by law,⁹² or to erect and maintain a shed during the pleasure of a named board,⁹³ or to occupy part of the water front of a municipal corporation,⁹⁴ or to control land under a river bank⁹⁵ is revocable at the pleasure of the municipal corporation. Where, however, the manner of revoking a license or permit is prescribed by charter or statute, a revocation, in order to be valid and effectual, must be made in the manner prescribed,⁹⁶ and the licensee is entitled to reasonable notice to vacate the premises on revocation of the permit.⁹⁷ It has also been held that, where a permit is revocable at the will of the municipality before its expiration date, municipal officers may not use the power of revocation in bad faith, arbitrarily, or capriciously;⁹⁸ and such a permit may not be canceled without notice or just cause.⁹⁹

on a pier granted pursuant to legislative authority.³ In such case the rights of the lessee or grantee ordinarily terminate at the expiration of the term of the lease or grant;³ and he may be evicted unless he establishes his right to retain possession under the terms of statutes generally protecting the rights of tenants of business space.⁴ The municipality may refuse to renew the lease at the expiration of the stated term where there is no contractual obligation for renewal, and a statute authorizes the termination of the lease at such time,⁵ and on such refusal to renew the lease the city may be under no obligation to compensate the lessee for improvements made by him.⁶

Sometimes provision is made in a lease of dock, wharf, or water front property for its termination on the happening or performance of a specified condition,⁷ but a provision for forfeiture on the grantee's noncompliance with the terms of a grant for a specific number of years has been held merely to give the city an option to terminate, and not to entitle the grantee to abandon possession at will.⁸ A right of termination reserved in a wharf franchise granted by a state board is available to a city on the transfer to it, by the state, of the authority of the state board.⁹ Where, on the termination of a lease of dock space, the commissioner of docks grants permission to remain over at his pleasure and the lessee gives notice that he will not pay the amount of rent he has been paying, there is merely a holding at will.¹⁰

Each party to a sale, lease, or grant of franchises or privileges pertaining to the public water front, docks, piers, or wharfage is bound by his covenants made therein and is liable in damages for a breach or violation thereof; and the lessee or grantee is bound to pay rent or other compensation in accordance with the terms of the lease or grant.

General rules apply with respect to the construction and operation of a sale, lease, or grant of franchises or privileges pertaining to the public water front docks, piers, or wharfage.¹¹ Each party to the grant or lease is bound by his covenants made therein¹² and is liable in damages for a breach or violation thereof;¹³ and the lessee or grantee is bound to pay rent or other compensation in accordance with the terms of the lease or grant.¹⁴ A grant by a city of a pier has been held to convey to the grantee a right to maintain a pier¹⁵ and to collect wharfage revenues arising therefrom,¹⁶ including a lawful extension of the pier,¹⁷ but not to convey an absolute fee.¹⁸ Under a lease of piers providing that the lessee during the term shall establish or erect on the piers certain improvements which are to become the property of the lessor on the expiration of the lease, improvements erected in conformity therewith are the property of the city during the term¹⁹ and at the expiration of the lease.²⁰

The grant of the right to use a wharf or dock ordinarily is mere bilateral dealing and not the grant of a privilege of exercising a calling by the grantee on property maintained for general public use, usually termed a license or franchise.²¹ So an instrument whereby a city leased for a period of years a public wharf owned by the city, and required the lessee to maintain and operate the premises as a public wharf in accordance with the conditions and requirements imposed by the instrument is a lease which creates a leasehold estate and not a franchise.²² However, a lease by a city of the wharfage which may arise, accrue, or become due, for the use and occupation of public wharf property together with the right to enter upon such wharf property for the purposes of the lease and to collect such wharfage, is not a lease of the wharf,²³ and does not convey to the lessee any exclusive right to the wharf²⁴ or to the soil.²⁵ An ordinance giving owners of property adjoining a river the privilege of controlling land under the river bank has been held to confer a mere revocable license,²⁶ but, where the city as proprietary owner of former submerged land received rent for such land from the adjoining upland owner, the relationship between the city and the upland owner was that of landlord and tenant, so that, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, the tax burden did not fall on the upland owner.²⁷

A provision in a lease limiting the charges which the lessee may exact from others does not obligate him to permit others to use the wharf on tendering the amount specified.²⁸ Also some charters provide that, where a pier is leased to a transportation company, no vessel can use the pier without the consent of the lessee.²⁹ A temporary lease of land dedicated for navigation purposes to be used for a different purpose will not work a forfeiture of the interest of the municipality.³⁰ A person leasing waterfront rights from a municipality may not question the lessor's title to the leased premises.³¹

§ 1816. Ownership of Submerged Lands

The rule obtaining in some jurisdictions that lands under navigable waters are the property of the state is applicable to submerged lands within the corporate limits of a municipal corporation,³² where the state has not,³³ or to the extent that it has not,³⁴ ceded or granted such lands to the municipality. An act extending the boundary of a municipal corporation over adjacent navigable waters does not grant the land covered by the waters to the municipality, but is merely for purposes of civil and criminal jurisdiction;³⁵ nor does a statute authorizing the municipality to construct piers and collect wharfage vest in it any title to the land under water between the piers.³⁶ In some cases, however, the title to adjacent submerged lands within certain limits is vested by statute in the municipality,³⁷ subject to the rights of the public for purposes of navigable.³⁸ A municipal corporation is also a riparian owner of waters and land thereunder within the limits of an abutting street, where it owns the fee in the street, and may use it in its discretion as long as it does not obstruct navigation or injure the rights of others.³⁹ On the other hand, where the fee to the street is not in the city but in the abutting property owners, the city is not a riparian owner.⁴⁰ Where a city is the owner of land under water, no one has a right to enter thereon and build a pier unless he owns the adjacent upland.⁴¹

§ 1817. Accretion and Batture

Alluvion or land formed by accretion, although within municipal limits, belongs to the riparian proprietors; but municipal corporations have control over the batture within their limits, subject to the servitude for public use.

Alluvion or land formed by accretion, although within municipal limits, belongs to the riparian proprietors.⁴² The municipal corporation itself may be a riparian proprietor within the meaning of the rule,⁴³ as where it owns the fee in a street bounded by a stream.⁴⁴

In at least one jurisdiction, municipal corporations have control over the batture within their limits, subject to the servitude for public use.⁴⁵ Under a statute which permits riparian owners to recover as much of the batture as is not necessary

F. PUBLIC PARKS, SQUARES, COMMONS, AND PLACES

§ 1818. In General

- a. Definitions
- b. General principles
- c. Control and management

a. Definitions

A public park is a piece of ground set apart for purposes of pleasure, exercise, amusement or ornament; and a public square is a plat of ground devoted to public purposes.

Under the rules as to the use and regulation of parks and public squares and places, a public park is a piece of ground set apart for purposes of pleasure, exercise, amusement or ornament,⁵² and is usually laid out in walks, drives, and recreation grounds.⁵³ The term "square" is said to indicate a public use,⁵⁴ either for purpose of a free passage or to be ornamented for pleasure, amusement, recreation, or health;⁵⁵ and it is sometimes used as meaning a park.⁵⁶

The term "public square" has acquired a legal meaning, indicating that certain property has been dedicated to the public use.⁵⁷ In ordinary acceptance, it means a plat of ground devoted to public purposes, and not the territory of the streets adjoining the sides of the public square;⁵⁸ property of a public nature held for governmental or public purposes.⁵⁹ Unlike a common, a public square is not intended for the exclusive use of the citizens of the city or borough where it is situated, but is also designed, it has been held, for the comfort and convenience of strangers in the pursuit of either business or pleasure.⁶⁰

b. General Principles

The legislature may and usually does delegate to municipal corporations the regulation and control of property held for public uses within their limits, such as parks, public squares, and commons; but such property is held in trust for the use of the public, and ordinarily

Rights and liabilities as to dedicated property generally see Dedication § 55.

Abandonment of use

City's abandonment of use of

The use to which park property may be devoted by a municipal corporation depends to some extent, however, on whether it was dedicated to the city by a donor or purchased or condemned by the municipality, as dedications by individuals are construed strictly according to the terms of the grant, while a less strict construction of those made by the public is adopted.⁶⁸ While the legislature cannot authorize a municipality to permit property dedicated for a particular public purpose to be used for other purposes,⁶⁹ the legislature may grant authority to devote park property to other than strictly park purposes,⁷⁰ or relieve the municipality from a trust,⁷¹ with respect to lands owned by the municipality in fee.

So, in the absence of restrictions imposed by statute or by dedication of land solely for a park, a city may have the power to vacate a public park for the purpose of erecting public improvements thereon,⁷² and a park in the middle of a street may be abolished by the city under its police power to regulate traffic on the streets.⁷³ Also, where land was conveyed to the city for park purposes, under a deed providing for reverter in case the city should cease to use the property for such purposes, at a time when the city had statutory authority to vacate as well as to establish parks, the city was authorized to abandon the property for park purposes and to devote it to other purposes on obtaining a waiver of the rights of the reversioners.⁷⁴ Where property is dedicated or set apart without restriction merely for public uses, the municipal authorities may determine for what use it is appropriate and shall be used,⁷⁵ and, if not irrevocably dedicated or appropriated by them to any particular public use,⁷⁶ its use may be changed as the public convenience and necessities require.⁷⁷ Ordinarily land held for park purposes is held for the benefit of the people of the state at large and not only for the benefit of the local inhabitants,⁷⁸ but a municipality accepting a deed of land for a park for the use and benefit of its citizens and residents may be obligated to hold such property only for their benefit and reasonably to exclude the nonresident public.⁷⁹

property for park is not established by temporary use for purpose not inconsistent with intended public use.—Heger v. City of St. Louis, 20 S.W.2d 665, 323 Mo. 1031.

public interest⁸⁰ and is not inconsistent with the purpose for which it was intended.⁸¹ A public square intended for ornamentation, recreation, and pleasure may be improved and beautified,⁸² but where it has been dedicated to the city primarily for the purpose of ornamentation it may be improper to install playgrounds therein.⁸³ As a general rule, parks may be devoted to any use which tends to promote popular enjoyment and recreation⁸⁴ and which is incidental to their use as parks.⁸⁵ So a bathing beach may be maintained in a park,⁸⁶ and it has been held that a swimming pool may be constructed on property which was acquired for a park but which has been undeveloped;⁸⁷ but it has also been held that the use of a park for a recreational center with a swimming pool closed in by a wire fence constituted an unauthorized diversion of property from park purposes.⁸⁸

The municipal authorities may provide for the pleasure, amusement, comfort, and refreshment of persons frequenting parks;⁸⁹ and the city may either provide the means itself⁹⁰ or grant privileges to private persons to do so, as discussed infra § 1822. The express power given a city to create and regulate parks impliedly grants the power to operate a nursery to supply park needs;⁹¹ and whether the city shall maintain such a nursery or buy trees and shrubs on the open market is an administrative function, and the courts will not interfere with its exercise in the absence of arbitrary action.⁹² The owner of property abutting a city park along a lake is not possessed of easements of passage and view.⁹³

c. Control and Management

by the public,⁹⁵ such as are necessary to preserve the public peace and safety,⁹⁶ the protection of the property from injury,⁹⁷ and to secure to the public its common enjoyment;⁹⁸ and municipal regulations made under a grant of police power, if reasonably necessary for the health of patrons of privately owned places of recreation, operated for profit, are equally applicable to the same kind of enterprise operated by the municipality in a proprietary capacity.⁹⁹ As long as they act within the legitimate scope of their authority their discretion is not subject to outside interference¹ or judicial revision or reversal;² but, in order to be valid, the regulations adopted must be reasonable³ and nondiscriminatory,⁴ and they must tend to promote the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare.⁵ The privilege of a citizen to use the public parks is not absolute but relative and must be exercised in subordination to the general comfort and convenience and be consonant with peace and good order, but the right cannot be abridged or denied in the guise of regulation.⁶

The power to regulate, control, and protect the use of parks, parkways, and public places ordinarily does not extend to private property adjacent to, but outside, the limits of such parks and the streets and highways surrounding them,⁷ but a municipality has been held to have ample police power to prohibit owners of property adjoining public parks from projecting voices from their private property on the parks describing their wares, to the irritation, annoyance, and inconvenience of people using the parks.⁸ A municipality may not, in the absence of special authority, exercise police power over a public park located beyond its territorial limits.⁹ While the cutting of ice from a stream within a public park may be prohibited,¹⁰ the fact that a park abuts on a stream gives the municipality only such rights in the stream as any other riparian owner would have.¹¹

Business activities. A municipal corporation may prevent its parks and common places from being used by any citizen or class of citizens for the conduct of any kind of private business.¹² So the city may prohibit the use of a public square as a place of business for commercial vehicles,¹³ or for the barter and sale of merchandise or property,¹⁴ and it may ban the distribution in public parks of handbills containing advertising matter.¹⁵ Where, however, a village was organized on territory partly occupied by a township park, the jurisdiction of the village over the park was limited to matters specified in a statute, and an ordinance prohibiting the sale of merchandise by one to whom the township park commissioners had granted a concession was held invalid.¹⁶

Speeches, assemblies, and parades. As a general rule, a city has the power to regulate the use of its public parks for public addresses, assemblies, and parades,¹⁷ and municipal authorities may require that a permit be obtained before the parks or other public places may be so used.¹⁸ Also, no citizen has any constitutional or primary inalienable right to use a park facility, designed primarily as an athletic stadium, for public addresses on social, political, or economic subjects, irrespective of the right of the municipality to regulate such facility for the best interests of the public.¹⁹ It has been held, however, that, consistent with the primary uses of parks and other public places for the use of the people for travel and recreation, such places must be open for the use of the people in order that they may exercise their rights of free speech and assembly²⁰ and to picket a private business located on park property;²¹ and an ordinance requiring a permit for the use of parks for public assembly and enabling a city officer to refuse a permit on his mere opinion that such refusal will prevent riots, disturbances, or disorderly assemblage has been held invalid.²²

Exclusion of portion of public; segregation of races. As a general rule, whether a portion of a park may be set aside temporarily for the use of a particular portion of the public rests in the discretion of the authorities;²³ but the general public cannot be excluded for an unreasonable length of time,²⁴ nor can a particular class of persons be arbitrarily excluded.²⁵ It has been held under some statutes that municipal authorities have discretionary power to adopt such rules and regulations as will provide for the separation of the white and

Operation by nonprofit corporation. The city may contract for the operation of a zoological garden, museum, or aquarium, by a private nonprofit corporation organized to promote the sciences of natural history.²⁹

§ 1819. Powers of Particular Boards, Bodies, or Officers business for private gain in the city parks.⁴³ The jurisdiction of such board or department is exclusive of that of other boards;⁴³ but, where the board or department has not adopted certain regulations within its authority to make, a city council may do so by ordinance,⁴⁴ and under some statutes the area covered by the intersection of a street and a boulevard is subject to the control and jurisdiction of the city, exercisable by the council, in respect of its use as a public street,⁴⁵ although the same area is also subject to the jurisdiction of park commissioners in respect of its use as a boulevard and pleasure drive-way.⁴⁶

§ 1820. Use for Public Buildings, Structures, or Statues

In the absence of statutory authority it is improper to use a portion of a public park, square, or pleasure ground for the erection and maintenance of a public building to be used for other than park purposes; but it is lawful to erect in a park a building or structure which contributes to the use and enjoyment of the park by the public.

In the absence of statutory authority it is improper to use a portion of a public park, square, or pleasure ground for the erection and maintenance of a public building⁴⁷ to be used for administrative⁴⁸ or military⁴⁹ purposes having no connection with park purposes.⁵⁰ On the other hand, it is lawful to erect in a park a building or structure which contributes to the use and enjoyment of the park by the public,⁵¹ and it has been held proper to erect in a park

a building designed to serve the purpose both of an office and a residence for the superintendent of the park.⁵² It has been held both proper⁵³ and improper⁵⁴ to construct a municipal auditorium on park property. The legislature may authorize the construction of an underground garage in the city common for the purpose of abating a public nuisance arising from serious traffic congestion,⁵⁵ even though it would result in withdrawing from the use of the public a small part of the surface of the common;⁵⁶ but it has also been held unlawful, without statutory authorization, to erect in a park a garage for the keeping of automobiles and motor trucks used by park officers and employees.⁵⁷ The property may be inclosed by a fence or railing,⁵⁸ provided there are openings therein at suitable intervals so that the public is not wholly excluded.⁵⁹

Statues, monuments, and memorials. The municipal authorities may permit the erection of statues and monuments in public parks,⁶⁰ whether they are purely ornamental⁶¹ or include the idea of a memorial;⁶² but, where a right to locate in park territory a boulder of a particular size is reserved, a boulder of any other size cannot be erected over objection raised by the proper authorities.⁶³ Municipal authorities may change the location of a memorial erected on land belonging to the municipality.⁶⁴

erected and maintained on park property,⁶⁵ but a private pier acquired by a municipal corporation for park purposes is private property, although owned by the municipality and held for a public purpose, until it is actually devoted to the public use for which it was acquired, where the municipality has neither invited nor permitted a use of it that is public in its nature.⁶⁶

§ 1821. Use for Purpose of Passage or Travel

Ordinarily a park is not a place for passage or travel and it is improper, in the absence of express legislative authority, to devote a portion of a park, square, or common to use for general street and highway purposes; but a charter or statutory provision may authorize the building of a street or highway through a park or on a portion of park property vacated for such use.

Under some charter provisions, a street may be laid across a park approach with the consent of the park commissioners⁶⁷ and thereby becomes a public highway at the intersection;⁶⁸ and where the commissioners have given an absolute and unconditional consent they cannot withdraw it at will⁶⁹ and thereby discontinue and terminate the existence of the street as a public thoroughfare across the parkway.⁷⁰ Ordinarily, however, a distinction is drawn between a street and a park,⁷¹ one being a place for passage and the other being a place for rest and recreation.⁷² A street is not a park⁷³ and a public park or square is not a street or highway or portion thereof,⁷⁴ even though roadways have been constructed through it.⁷⁵

Sometimes the term "park" is used to designate a small inclosed and ornamented strip or plot of land in the center of a street,⁷⁶ and such a park is a portion of the highway.⁷⁷ A "parkway" is not a "park," but it is a street or highway of a certain kind;⁷⁸ a street of special width, which is given a parklike appearance by planting its sides or center, or both, with grass, shade trees, and flowers, and intended for recreation and for street purposes.⁷⁹ In other words, it is merely an ornamental part of a street which may be used for recreational purposes.⁸⁰

It is improper, in the absence of express legislative authority, to devote a portion of a public park, square, or common to the use of the public for general street and highway purposes unconnected with the enjoyment of the property for park purposes.⁸¹ Also it is improper to use a portion of park property for the construction of a sidewalk for the benefit of an individual.⁸² The legislature may, however, authorize the construction of a highway in a park,⁸³ and, where a charter or statutory provision so authorizes, a street or highway may be built through a park⁸⁴ or on a portion of park property vacated for such use.⁸⁵ Also, the laying of sidewalks or streets through or around a public park is not necessarily a diversion of the property to other than park purposes;⁸⁶ it may be proper where the streets or sidewalks are necessary or contribute to the full enjoyment of the property for park purposes.⁸⁷ A speedway may be constructed in a park,⁸⁸ and the making of a pleasure driveway around and on the borders of a large public square is not improper;⁸⁹ but an owner of private property adjoining a public square cannot require the municipal authorities, on inclosing the square, to leave a space for a public way between the inclosure and the line of his property.⁹⁰

Municipal authorities may exclude such use of boulevards within the confines of a park as mitigates against full realization of the purposes of the park for public use,⁹¹ and they may exercise the power to enact traffic regulations for parks and boulevards provided such regulations promote the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare.⁹² The proper authorities may regulate the speed at which persons may ride or drive in parks or parkways;⁹³ require vehicles to keep to the right in certain cases;⁹⁴ prohibit the taking of additional passengers on a public passenger vehicle except at the direction of the person first hiring the vehicle;⁹⁵ prohibit the solicitation of passengers for hire;⁹⁶ or even exclude certain classes of vehicles from the parks or parkways or a portion thereof,⁹⁷ if such regulation promotes and protects the public welfare⁹⁸ and is not discriminatory.⁹⁹

§ 1822. Conveyances, Leases, and Grants of Privileges

- a. In general
- b. Construction and operation

a. In General

A municipal corporation may have the power to grant certain privileges with respect to the private use of park property, squares, or public places, but unless authority has been conferred on it by statute it cannot sell, lease, or permit the use of such public property for purposes, or on terms and conditions, which are inconsistent with the purpose for which the property was intended or which will unreasonably impair or interfere with the right of the public to use the premises.

As a general rule, no citizen has the right to use at his pleasure or on his own terms public property belonging to, and under the control of, a municipal corporation without a permit from the designated officer of the municipality or its executive officers.¹ A municipality may, on the other hand, have the power to grant certain privileges with respect to the private use of park property, squares, or public places.² So the proper municipal authorities may

Under city charter section authorizing board of park commissioners to lease property which it may acquire on behalf of city, board was held without authority to lease for radio broadcasting station park property which had been acquired by city and dedicated to public use, since power of board was limited to such time, as property had not become part of public parks of city and remained undedicated to public use.—*Hanlon v. "Erection and encumbrances"

The term as used in charter providing that the board of park commissioners may enact ordinances for the government and protection of all parks, and that the parks shall at all times be subject to all ordinances with respect to any erection or encumbrance thereon, does not include a portion of a house erected by the owner of contiguous property, a part of which encroaches on the park.—Ackerman v. True, 66 N.Y.S. 140, 31 Misc. 597, 600.

Term of lease

(1) Permitting individuals to secure continuous tenure of park lands and to erect permanent structures will be enjoined as diversion of lands; plan permitting camping on park lands should provide for temporary tenure, impartial method of issuing permits, and compliance with health regulations.—Tobin v. Hennessy, 222 N.Y.S. 484, 220 App. Div. 695.

Public way

A charter provision authorizing the granting of concessions and privileges in all of the public squares and parks of the city, and in all park drives, parkways, boulevards, play or recreation grounds, does not authorize the leasing of a portion of a public highway which is in no way connected with public parks or public recreation grounds, but is for the general use of the public and differs in no respect from the other public highways and streets of the city.—*Reed v. Exclusive right of possession

City officers held unauthorized to vest in plaintiff by private contract exclusive right to possess public property in park.—Keefe v. City of Monroe, 120 So. 102, 9 La.App. 545.

Rights of abutting owners

Park commissioners and art institute cannot make contract as to building on park property which is destructive of abutting owner's

A charter or statutory provision may, however, authorize a municipality to convey¹¹ or lease¹² lands where it holds the absolute title thereto in fee, even though such lands have been previously acquired for, or used as, a park;¹³ and a deed of gift of property to the city, for recreational purposes, may authorize it to operate the property through a lessee.¹⁴ So the city may be authorized to lease land and dwellings acquired by it for a park until plans shall be formulated and necessary funds procured,¹⁵ and it may lease park property to a nonprofit corporation for the purpose of maintaining a horticultural garden and other recreational facilities for public use.¹⁶ The power of a municipality to lease a municipal swimming pool does not, however, include the power thereby to discriminate against the members of a minority race in the exercise of their constitutional rights.¹⁷ Due formalities must be observed in the making of a conveyance or lease of park property, and compliance must be had with all statutory requirements.¹⁸ A lease made or concession granted by a municipality for a grossly inadequate consideration will not be upheld.¹⁹ The making and withdrawal of an offer to sell property do not alter its status as a public place.²⁰

For horse racing. It seems that a municipality may grant a concession to hold in a public park race meets for short periods of time for the entertainment of the public,²¹ and it has been held that the municipality may lease the portion of a park on which a race track and grand stand are located to a driving club for the purpose of racing horses where the public is excluded therefrom only on certain days;²² but it cannot so grant the use and control of a part of the park for a race track as practically to deprive the public of its enjoyment.²³

For transportation purposes. Unless authorized by a valid statute,²⁴ the municipal authorities are rights under existing easement in park.—Stevens Hotel Co. v. Art Institute of Chicago, 260 Ill.App. 555, transferred, see 173 N.E. 761, 342 Ill. 180.

without right to permit the occupation and use of a public park, square, or common, or part thereof, for railroad or street railroad purposes,²⁵ but they may permit such occupation and use of public lands belonging to the city and not appropriated to any particular use;²⁶ park commissioners may grant to a public service company the right to operate motor busses on the boulevards, parkways, and streets under their control;²⁷ and a statute prohibiting the construction of a street railroad in any park does not apply to a park which is laid out, after the granting of a franchise to a street railroad company, so as to include the route of the railroad.²⁸ A statute authorizing the construction of a railway tunnel or subway under part of a city common is a sufficient authority for such construction, without a vote of the city government or of the citizens of the city.²⁹

b. Construction and Operation

Valid provisions of a conveyance, lease, or grant of privileges with respect to public parks, squares, or places will be construed in accordance with the intent of the parties and the meaning of the language used in the instrument, and will be given effect.

Valid provisions of a conveyance, lease, grant of privileges,³⁰ or contract to lease³¹ with respect to public parks, squares, or places will be construed in accordance with the intent of the parties and the meaning of the language used in the instrument, and will be given effect. This rule applies with respect to the construction and operation of provisions relating to the property covered,³² the obligations assumed by the municipality,³³ the rights reserved to it,³⁴ and the rent or other compensation to be paid;³⁵ and a violation of covenants in the lease may render the city liable for damages.³⁶

On the other hand, no obligation on the part of the city arises from an agreement made by minor officials, not authorized to bind the city or the park board and not incorporated in the lease, grant, or concession.³⁷ Provisions for forfeiture or annulment contained in the lease or other instrument may be enforced,³⁸ provided the forfeiture has been properly declared³⁹ and has not been waived;⁴⁰ but the lease or grant of privileges may not be revoked without justifiable cause,⁴¹ and, even though the instrument is no more than a revocable license, its revocation contrary to its terms will render the city liable in damages.⁴² Where the use of space in a city park exists by virtue of a license rather than a lease, the licensee has no right to continue occupation of such space on expiration of the period of the license under a statute protecting the rights of tenants against eviction.⁴³

Reasonable regulations of traffic within a park are binding on a company operating stages within the park under a franchise granted by the state,⁴⁴ and a person operating a restaurant in a city park under contract with a municipality is subject to reasonable regulations as to the manner of conducting the business.⁴⁵ Also, where a city leases premises with a provision that a portion thereof may be sublet for saloon purposes, the fact that subsequently, pursuant to statute, the city by ordinance prohibits saloon business on such premises does not constitute an eviction,⁴⁶ or release the lessee from paying rent,⁴⁷ or entitle him to any abatement thereof.⁴⁸ However, it has been held that an ordinance regulating Sunday amusements does not become a part of a lease, executed by the city, covering an amusement park, in the absence of any reference thereto in the lease.⁴⁹

§ 1823. Prevention or Abatement of Improper Use

A municipal corporation within the limits of which a public park or common is located may bring an action to prevent or abate an obstruction to, or interference with, the proper use of the property; and a private citizen or resident of the municipality has a right of action where he has sustained or is threatened with a special injury.

A municipal corporation within the limits of which a public park or common is located may bring an action to prevent or abate an obstruction to, or interference with, the proper use of the property;⁵⁰ but it has no right to distrain and hold an automobile which has run into and injured a light standard in the park, until the owner shall make satisfaction for the damage done,⁵¹ its remedy being an action at law to recover for the damage.⁵² Except in some jurisdictions,⁵³ a private citizen or resident of a municipality has no right of action by reason of the diversion or appropriation of public property, such as parks and squares, to other uses, where he has not sustained or is not threatened with any special injury peculiar to himself as distinguished from the rest of the public,⁵⁴ but he has such right of action where he does sustain a special injury;⁵⁵ and ordinarily the owners of property abutting on a park or square have such a special right to insist that it shall not be appropriated to other uses.⁵⁶

Charter provision requiring application to city council for redress, satisfaction, compensation, or relief before filing original petition against city did not apply to a suit to enjoin city from diverting park property to sidewalk uses for the benefit of a private person.—Look v. El Paso Union Pass. Depot Co., Tex. Com.App., 228 S.W.2d 917.

The owner of a lot in the immediate vicinity of a park, although not abutting thereon, but who is an adjacent proprietor in that he has an unobstructed view from his property, may sustain such an injury by reason of its diversion to other uses as to give him a right of action to enjoin the diversion and abandonment by the city of the grounds as a public park.⁵⁷ However, abutting property owners may waive their right to have a park kept free of buildings as to a structure erected by a particular person and in a particular portion of the park,⁵⁸ and, while such waiver may extend to a reasonably necessary enlargement of such structure,⁵⁹ it does not preclude objection to the erection of further buildings.⁶⁰ It has been held that the owner of property abutting on a city park along a lake is not entitled to an injunction against the construction of a clubhouse outside the park limits but obstructing the view of, and access to, the lake.⁶¹

In the case of the dedication of a square to the public use, it has been said that the legislature has no power to alter or extend such dedication as against one who owns lots bordering thereon and purchased by him with reference thereto;⁶² but not even an abutting owner can object to a sale or appropriation to other uses of property to which the municipality has an absolute title in fee and which is made pursuant to legislative authority.⁶³ A person owning property abutting on a park may be restrained from making an improper use of the park.⁶⁴

G. MARKETS AND MARKET PLACES, STANDS, AND STALLS

§ 1824. In General

The right to control and regulate public markets and market places is an exercise of the police power of the states which may be delegated to municipal corporations, but the municipality must exercise the power in the manner prescribed by statute and its regulations must be reasonable, and not arbitrary or discriminatory.

The right to control and regulate public markets and market places is an exercise of the police power of the states.⁶⁵ Such power may be delegated to municipal corporations⁶⁶ and is a particularly appropriate subject for municipal regulation.⁶⁷ This power may be exercised either under statutory or charter provisions relating expressly to the regulation of markets⁶⁸ or the vending of meat and other commodities usually sold at such places,⁶⁹ or under the general police powers ordinarily possessed by municipal corporations.⁷⁰ The power may be exercised whether the market is carried on by a corporation,⁷¹ an unincorporated association,⁷² or even a private individual.⁷³ The municipal police power over markets cannot be surrendered.⁷⁴

The power conferred on a municipal corporation to control markets is, as a rule, not to be strictly construed except where the regulation will tend to produce a monopoly in favor of private individuals.⁷⁵ The right to regulate public markets cannot be used to create a monopoly of the right to sell⁷⁶ or so as to deny the right of consumers and producers of market supplies to deal with each other directly.⁷⁷ While in judging the reasonableness of such regulations the court will not look closely into mere matters of judgment where there may be a reasonable difference of opinion, and will not interfere with the exercise of the discretion granted to the municipal corporation on the ground of unreasonableness except in a clear case,⁷⁸ regulations relating to markets must be reasonable,⁷⁹ and not arbitrary⁸⁰ or discriminatory.⁸¹ The regulation must have its foundation on public necessity;⁸² it must have some rational tendency to promote the public health, safety, and welfare of the municipality.⁸³ Any ordinance relating to the regulation of markets is invalid if in conflict with a valid statutory provision,⁸⁴ and a statute expressly limiting the powers of municipal authorities with respect to markets is not repealed by a general statute authorizing them to enact all ordinances necessary for the general welfare of the municipality.⁸⁵ The power granted by statute must be exercised in the manner prescribed therein.⁸⁶

§ 1825. Delegation of Power

In the absence of express or implied authorization from the state, the discretionary power to control and regulate markets must be exercised by the municipal governing body and cannot be delegated to any board or official; but, where the power is conferred by statute on a certain board or official, it may and should be exercised by such person or agency.

In the absence of express authorization from the state or power necessarily implied from that granted, the discretionary power to control and regulate markets must be exercised by the municipal governing body and cannot be delegated to any board or official;⁸⁷ but, where the power is conferred by statute on a certain board or official, it may and should be exercised by such board or official.⁸⁸ Under delegated authority municipal corporations may provide that certain markets and like facilities shall be established and operated subject to the regulations adopted by designated boards or officials,⁸⁹ but such boards or officials are limited to the powers conferred on them,⁹⁰ and an officer vested only with regulatory powers may be without power to establish or abolish market areas.⁹¹ The fixing of rent of market stores has been held to be an administra-

Order of commissioner of markets purporting to revoke licenses of public pushcart market licensees which was void because of lack of authority of commissioner to make such order could not be upheld on ground that licenses expired soon after order was to become effective, since commissioner who had no power to revoke license on ground that he abolished the market was equally without power to refuse to renew license on that ground alone.—Smith v. Morgan, supra.

Alienation of land

Agriculture and markets law, in transferring the functions of management and control of public markets to the commissioner of public markets, merely gives him authority of business management, without transferring to him the residual powers of the commissioners of the sinking fund as the ultimate trustees of the city property, to alienate land no longer needed for market purposes.—*Elth v. tive function⁹² which may be delegated to designated officials or boards.⁹³

§ 1826. Location; Abandonment and Removal

In the absence of any statutory restriction as to place, the right to establish a market includes the right to fix its location, to shift that location from place to place when the convenience or the necessity of the people requires it, and to abolish a previously existing market and establish another in a different locality within the municipal boundaries.

In the absence of any statutory restriction as to place, the right to establish a market includes the right to fix its location,⁹⁴ to shift that location from place to place when the convenience or the necessity of the people requires it,⁹⁵ and to abolish a previously existing market and establish another in a different locality within the municipal boundaries.⁹⁶ The fact that the site was acquired for market purposes is immaterial.⁹⁷ It has been held, however, that a municipal corporation should not abolish a duly authorized and existing public market which is the only one within the municipal boundaries;⁹⁸ and an order abolishing a public pushcart market because of alleged traffic difficulties has been held discriminatory and unreasonable where the conclusion that traffic difficulties would result from continuance of the market was based on mere conjecture.⁹⁹

The power to establish markets will not authorize a municipal corporation to erect permanent market buildings on a public street so as to create a nuisance by obstructing traffic or injuring abutting owners;¹ and it is immaterial in such case that the proposed site is already used as a market.² The right to build a market house in a street may be acquired as against a property owner by express grant from him³ or by adverse possession.⁴

On the question whether municipal corporations may or may not authorize the use of public streets for the purpose of holding markets there seems to be a conflict of opinion; some cases have sustained the power of the corporation to do so,⁵ while other cases have denied the existence of the power.⁶ The conflict has been explained by distinguishing cases where the abutting owner owned the fee to the street and where he did not.⁷ If the abutting owner owns the fee, it has been held that a municipal corporation cannot authorize the use of the street for market purposes without compensation.⁸ On the other hand, if the owner of the abutting property does not own the fee, it has been held that the authorization by a municipal corporation to use the streets for market purposes is not a taking of property without just compensation.⁹ Although a city may prohibit the use of a public street as a market,¹⁰ as long as it elects to permit a street to be so

City ordinance relating to establishment of public markets is construable as designating certain territories as market locations and permitting commissioner of markets to designate products that might be sold in the territories, and not construable as permitting commissioner to determine territories in which markets should be located.—Smith v. Display of furniture

used, it cannot exclude from the use of the market an abutting property owner or an owner who holds part of the abutting premises by leasehold,¹¹ and it cannot discriminate against some abutting owners in favor of others with respect to the use of the market.¹²

§ 1827. Acquisition of Property; Rights Therein and Use Thereof

A municipal corporation, under its power to establish and regulate markets, may purchase a suitable market site and erect the buildings required. The use of property for a market may be discontinued and the property devoted to other purposes or sold where it is not exclusively dedicated for market purposes.

A municipal corporation, under its power to establish and regulate markets, may purchase a suitable market site and erect the buildings required,¹³ or it may set aside certain public lands in the city for market purposes.¹⁴ The use of land by municipal corporations for a municipal market is for a proprietary purpose,¹⁵ and not for a governmental purpose.¹⁶ An ordinance designating certain property for a public market and authorizing the purchase thereof does not relate to a franchise¹⁷ and does not constitute municipal legislation¹⁸ within constitutional and charter provisions requiring a referendum. Since municipal corporations are not duty bound to maintain markets, as discussed supra § 1056, they may discontinue the use of property as such;¹⁹ and, when so authorized by statute, they may dispose of unneeded market lands, whether by sale or lease, and for private purposes if they so decide,²⁰ where the property is not exclusively dedicated for market purposes.²¹

Where land is purchased under a statute authorizing its acquisition for the purpose of a public market, the municipality, although acquiring the fee to such land, cannot permit its use for other than market purposes;²² but where a statute authorizes the construction of a market house and grants to the municipality in fee certain lands on which it is constructed but which are more than are necessary for such purpose, the remainder may, in the absence of any restriction in the grant, be used for other purposes;²³ and, where a city purchases land in fee, the fact that it was intended and subsequently used for market purposes will not constitute a dedication of the property for market purposes so as to prevent the municipality from removing the market to another locality and appropriating the old location to a different municipal use.²⁴ A municipality which voluntarily accepts a partnership with an individual in the profits to be derived from a market house must accord to him the ordinary rights of a partner with respect to financial administration of property.²⁵

§ 1828. Leases and Sales; Stalls and Privileges

Municipal corporations have power to lease or sell stalls or other space or facilities in public markets; the precise rights of the occupant of the stall or other space will depend, as a general rule, on the terms of the contract under which the space is held, but the purchase of a stall does not confer on the purchaser an absolute property, but a qualified right only.

The right to sell in public market stands or stalls is acquired by contract with the municipal or other authorities controlling the market.²⁷ Municipal corporations have power to lease²⁸ or sell²⁹ stalls in public markets, or other space or facilities therein, or to prohibit the occupancy of a stall without procuring a lease;³⁰ and such leases or sales may be made by a board on which, or officer on whom, authority has been conferred.³¹ The power to lease or sell market space or rights may and should be exercised in the manner prescribed by statute.³²

General rules apply with respect to the construction and operation of such a lease or contract to lease,³³ and the precise rights of the occupant of a stall or other space in the market will depend on the terms of the contract under which the space is held.³⁴

In general, the purchase of a stall in a public market, like the purchase of a pew in a church, does not confer on the purchaser an absolute property, but a qualified right only.³⁵ The right to sell at a stall or stand in a public market is to be exercised by the lessee thereof subject to all qualifications and restrictions that the municipal corporation may impose;³⁶ and this is so whether or not they are made part of the lease or contract.³⁷ Such requirements or restrictions must be reasonable.³⁸ The right of an occupant of a stall in a public market is such a right of property as may be transferred,³⁹ and is limited in duration to the existence of the market.⁴⁰ The lease of a market stall does not imply a contract on the part of the municipality to protect the lessee against competition by unlicensed vendors.⁴¹

Tenant at will

(1) Lease of stall in city market which allegedly was to run as long as lessee paid rent and complied with reasonable rules and regulations of city governing operation of market held to create tenancy at will, terminable at will of either city or lessee.—Holcombe v. (2) The lessee of a market stall for one year, who held over but failed to comply with the provisions of a city ordinance as to the payment of rent, was a mere tenant at will, and could be evicted after the proper notice had been given.—Dubuque v. Miller, 11 Iowa 583.

A person in possession of the stall under a verbal lease from the market master, although the latter had no authority to make it, is not a trespasser so as to authorize a forcible seizure and removal of his property,⁴² and the lessee and collector of market revenues may not summarily eject the occupant of a stall who has tendered the required dues and conformed to the market regulations.⁴³ The occupant of a market stall who sells his rights to another is not bound in warranty to his vendee in case of an eviction or disturbance of the latter by the municipality itself,⁴⁴ but will be liable only for his own acts which interfere with the enjoyment of what he sells.⁴⁵

The lessee of a market takes subject to the provisions of existing ordinances⁴⁶ and the right of the municipality to make necessary public improvements.⁴⁷ A lease of an established market does not prevent the municipality from establishing another market and leasing it to a different person,⁴⁸ or require it to protect the lessee against competition by unauthorized private markets, unless the contract so provides,⁴⁹ or give such lessee any right of action against a person maintaining a competing and unauthorized private market.⁵⁰

The operator of a quasi-public market established by contract with a city may contract with tenants for the use of market stalls,⁵¹ and it may proceed to eject such tenants for cause without joining the city as a party plaintiff to the action;⁵² but the operator may not without cause eject a tenant who has complied with all the rules and regulations and has regularly paid the stipulated rent, where the city itself, if the market were a public market, could not do so.⁵³

§ 1829. Permits and Licenses

Municipal corporations may require that permits or licenses be obtained for the privilege of occupying stands or stalls in a public market, and they may require the payment of a reasonable amount as a license fee. The licensed occupant of a stall or stand in a market has no such interest in the stall as the lessee of a store or building, and the municipality may provide for the revocation of the permit or license.

Municipal corporations may require that permits or licenses be obtained for the privilege of occupying stands or stalls in a public market.⁵⁴ Ordinarily the number of persons to whom permits may be issued and the space to be used by any licensee are matters within the discretion of the board in which, or the officer in whom, authority has been vested;⁵⁵ but the grant or refusal of a permit cannot be left to unlimited or arbitrary discretion.⁵⁶ Municipalities may require the payment of a reasonable amount as a license fee from those occupying stands or stalls in a public market,⁵⁷ even under the general power of regulation and control,⁵⁸ unless restricted by statute.⁵⁹ Charges for licenses or market privileges must, however, be reasonable⁶⁰ and without discrimination,⁶¹ and cannot be imposed as a means of raising revenue;⁶² but the requirement of a reasonable license fee is not objectionable as a tax for revenue⁶³ or as tending to create a monopoly.⁶⁴ The right to a stand in the market without payment of a license fee cannot be acquired by prescription.⁶⁵ Payment of the required license fee gives the payee a right of occupancy, although his license has not been issued.⁶⁶

The licensed occupant of a stall or stand in a market has no such interest in the stall as the lessee of a store or dwelling,⁶⁷ and he has no legal right to the renewal of the license or to the occupation of the premises during an indefinite number of years at his option.⁶⁸ The municipal corporation may provide for the revocation of the permit or license, or termination of the occupancy thereunder,⁶⁹ in which case a licensee who refuses to vacate after the expiration or revocation of his license is a trespasser⁷⁰ and may be ejected, no greater force than necessary being used,⁷¹ or he may be restrained, in an action in equity, from remaining in possession.⁷² The holder of a permit in an old market house, when the market is removed to another locality, is not entitled as a matter of right to a permit for maintaining a stall in the new market house.⁷³ The relationship between the city and a permittee who occupies a stall in an inclosed market which is in the exclusive possession and control of the city during the hours the market is closed is that of bailor and bailee;⁷⁴ the city is obliged to account and to exercise reasonable care to provide for the safety of the merchandise and chattels left under its control,⁷⁵ but it is not an insurer of the safety of such goods and chattels,⁷⁶ and it is not liable for any loss where it has exercised reasonable care.⁷⁷

Assignability. Permits for the conduct of market stalls are assignable if the consent or approval of designated public officials or boards is obtained,⁷⁸ in which case the assignee is entitled to the same rights and privileges as originally possessed by the assignor.⁷⁹

Penalty for sale without license. A municipal corporation may provide that persons occupying stalls in a market without authority, for the purpose of selling therefrom, shall be liable to a fine.⁸⁰

a. In General

Under the power to regulate and control markets, municipal corporations may enact and enforce all regulations which are desirable for the protection of public health, and they may adopt and enforce any reasonable and proper rules and regulations with respect to the market and the business transacted there.

While there is some conflict as to what grant of authority will justify particular regulations,⁸¹ under the power to regulate and control markets, municipal corporations may enact and enforce all regulations which are desirable for the protection of public health,⁸² and they may adopt and enforce any reasonable and proper rules and regulations with respect to the market and the business transacted there.⁸³ The municipality may enact any reasonable regulation necessary to preserve the clean-

(2) Provision prohibiting parking against market house except by certain vehicles for described purposes for limited time.—Staub v. City of Knoxville, supra.

Disposal of one load

Under ordinance of city regulating a market, and providing that each stall or place must be vacated as soon as the load is disposed of, and that the city reserves the right to re-rent the stall when vacated for the remaining market period, the payment of the fee provided for a market period gave the lessee the right to dispose of one load of produce therein during that market period and no more; the market was not intended as a place where jobbers in produce could come and conduct a business by paying the fee of two dollars a day for two stalls.—State ex rel. Harley v. City of Wichita, 99 P.2d 812, 151 Kan. 390.

liness of market places,⁸⁴ may confine the sale of particular articles to certain designated stands or portions of the market and prevent their sale elsewhere,⁸⁵ may prohibit the transfer of goods from one vehicle to another for sale,⁸⁶ may prohibit parking near the curb in a market area except for sale purposes,⁸⁷ may limit a marketer to one vehicle on the market place at any one time,⁸⁸ and may require the immediate removal from the market of any vehicle when it becomes empty or substantially empty.⁸⁹

Municipal regulations may also limit the sales in a market to specific articles,⁹⁰ may forbid delivering within the municipal limits meat that has not been exposed for sale in the public market,⁹¹ may prohibit the sale of less than a specified quantity of meat outside market stalls,⁹² and may prohibit the standing of wagons containing perishable produce within the market limits for over a specified period of time between specified hours unless permitted by a designated market official.⁹³ Regulations have also been sustained which prohibit the selling of provisions at the public market which have been previously purchased within the municipal boundaries outside the market,⁹⁴ which prohibit the slaughter of poultry in public markets,⁹⁵ which regulate market hours,⁹⁶ or which require diseased or unwholesome articles to be removed.⁹⁷ On the other hand, the corporation cannot prohibit the sale of perishable articles entirely within the municipal limits,⁹⁸ and a provision prohibiting salesmen from selling from more than one vehicle has been held unreasonable and invalid.⁹⁹

Forestalling and regrating. Municipal corporations may enact ordinances or regulations to prevent forestalling and regrating,¹ and are in some cases expressly authorized to do so.²

The ordinary rules of construction apply to the construction of statutes³ and ordinances or regulations⁴ relating to the regulation of markets.

b. Sales outside Markets

As a general rule a municipal corporation may prohibit the sale of marketable articles within certain limits or during certain hours except at the established market; but such restrictive regulations must be reasonable and must fall within the scope of the power granted to the municipality by the state.

As a general rule a municipal corporation may prohibit by ordinance or by-law the sale of marketable articles within certain limits or during certain hours except at the established market,⁵ and it is within the power of the legislature to authorize municipal corporations to do so.⁶ While there are decisions which deny the right of a municipal corporation to prohibit selling outside the public markets, under a general power to regulate and control markets,⁷ ordinarily it is held that such restrictive regulations as to selling outside market limits may be made under a general power to establish and regulate markets,⁸ and that, where adequate market facilities are furnished, such regulations are not unreasonable or in restraint of trade but a proper regulation of it,⁹ although the rule is otherwise where market facilities are not furnished.¹⁰ In some cases such ordinances or by-laws have been held void on the ground that they were unreasonable and in restraint of trade.¹¹ The validity of such ordinances and by-laws as being in restraint of trade obviously depends very largely on the extent of the prohibition or regulation contained in the particular ordinance or by-law, it being well settled that such ordinances or by-laws must be reasonable.¹² The ordinance or by-law must fall within the scope of the power granted.¹³

In accordance with the foregoing rules, it has been held that municipal corporations may, when duly authorized, prohibit the maintenance of private markets within a certain distance of a public market,¹⁴ prohibit the sale of perishable food outside public markets¹⁵ or within certain limits about them¹⁶ or outside markets during market hours,¹⁷ prohibit the sale of anything but fruit by keepers of fruit stands within a certain distance of the market,¹⁸ or prescribe such regulations as to the time and place of selling outside the market limits as the general welfare of the municipality may demand.¹⁹ It seems to be uniformly held that under a power to regulate the vending of meats, etc., a municipality may prevent their being retailed outside the public markets.²⁰ A municipality may also, under a power to prevent the obstruction of streets, prohibit the standing of wagons for the sale of market produce within certain limits,²¹ or prevent any street vending without a permit.²² It may prescribe that huckster wagons shall not stand in the market place longer than a prescribed time.²³

Effect of contract. The power of a municipal corporation under its police power to prohibit the sale of marketable articles elsewhere than in the established markets cannot be fettered or surrendered by private contracts.²⁴

License. A license may be required for the sale of salt meat and fish outside the market.²⁵

Penalty. A municipal corporation may enact ordinances prescribing reasonable penalties for selling marketable articles outside the established market.²⁶

c. Farm Products

A municipal corporation may enact regulations to insure the freshness of farm products sold in the market; and for that purpose it may restrict the use of the market and streets and alleys adjacent thereto to producers.

In the exercise of the power to regulate public markets, a municipal corporation may enact regulations to insure the freshness of farm products sold in the market;²⁷ and for that purpose it may restrict the use of the market and streets and alleys adjacent thereto to producers.²⁸ The latter enact-

Filing of certificate Provision in ordinance regulating public market requiring seller from outside state to file certificate showing himself bona fide producer held not invalid as unreasonable.—Staub

ment has been held valid, and not discriminatory.²⁹ The corporation may designate a portion of a market which shall be free to citizens coming to vend the produce of their own farms,³⁰ and exclude from such portion persons not answering this description.³¹

d. Inspection

A municipal corporation may provide for the inspection of the quality of articles sold within the public markets and the weights and measures employed in making sales.

A municipal corporation, in the exercise of its power to regulate public markets, may provide for the inspection of the quality of articles sold within the market³² and the weights and measures employed in making sales.³³ It also may provide that the market itself shall be regularly inspected by designated public officials,³⁴ and impose the cost of inspection on the owner or operator of such markets.³⁵ The governing body of the corporation exercises a wide discretion in determining the amount of the fee for inspection,³⁶ but such fee must not be unreasonable or arbitrary;³⁷ the fee must be in proportion to the amount necessary to meet the expense and cost of the service.³⁸

§ 1831. In General

- a. General rules
- b. Public housing
- c. Public utilities

a. General Rules

A municipal corporation may have the power to lease public lands to another for a sufficient consideration and to recover rent under such a lease; and, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise, such a lease need not be submitted to the electorate for its approval.

In accordance with the general rules as to the right of a municipal corporation to dispose of its property, discussed supra §§ 961-970, a municipality may have the power to lease public land or property to others³⁹ for a sufficient consideration,⁴⁰ and to recover rent under such lease,⁴¹ and, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise, such a lease need not be submitted to the electorate for its approval.⁴² Such a lease may be invalid, however, if it operates to prevent free legislation in a matter of municipal government,⁴³ and, where a city has an easement only in lots conveyed to it to be used for levee purposes, its lease of the lots for building purposes is void and confers no right of possession as against the grantor of the easement.⁴⁴ Under a statute authorizing municipalities to own manufacturing plants and to lease them for operation by individuals or private corporations, the lease must be of such character as will insure the continued operation of the proposed industry, with power in the municipality to enforce the continued operation, best to promote and protect the public interest.⁴⁵

Miss.—Albritton v. City of Winona, 178 So. 799, 181 Miss. 75, 115 A.L.R. 1436, appeal dismissed Albritton

The rights and liabilities of the parties under a lease of city-owned property depend on the terms of the contract.⁴⁶ A conveyance by the city subsequent to the leasing of property does not relieve the city from its obligations to the lessees under the lease.⁴⁷ Where there is a lease of lands, the reversion being exempt from taxation, the tax on the usufructuary interest, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, necessarily falls on the lessee;⁴⁸ but, where subleases of public-owned lands are silent as to who shall pay realty taxes thereon, the obligation rests on the lessor.⁴⁹ Where a person has received a permit to construct improvements on city-owned land, he is entitled to a reasonable time within which to remove the improvements on revocation of the permit.⁵⁰

An action to enjoin a municipality from improperly using certain premises and from erecting and maintaining a fence thereon has been held maintainable without proof that plaintiff had filed a written notice of claim against the municipality pursuant to law.⁵¹ An ordinance providing that a mineral water system should be managed by a committee selected by the council, defining their duties and powers and providing that the members might be removed by the council, has been held not invalid as placing the system beyond the control of the mayor and the city council, or as a delegation of legislative powers.⁵² A municipal corporation may exercise police power in the protection of the territory outside its limits acquired by it for water supply to insure cleanliness and prevent any business and conduct likely to corrupt the fountain of water supply for the city.⁵³

b. Public Housing

The governing body of a municipal corporation or subordinate agency, such as a housing authority or commission, must act within the limits imposed by constitutional and statutory provisions in managing or controlling public housing projects erected with public funds.

The governing body of a municipal corporation or subordinate agency, such as a housing authority or commission, must act within the limits imposed by constitutional and statutory provisions in managing or controlling public housing projects erected with public funds.⁵⁴ So it has been held that the municipality in exercising its right of management may not exclude persons of the colored race from certain projects and segregate them in another, notwithstanding the project made available to colored applicants is of like character and equal quality as the other projects.⁵⁵ Any breach of contract by a housing authority receiving federal aid may be complained of only by the federal agency with whom the contract was made, and not by tenants of the housing authority;⁵⁶ but the fact that the buildings of a housing unit were constructed by a federal agency does not excuse a city's housing authority to which the buildings were leased from attempting to remedy a dangerous condition in the buildings after the authority was operating them.⁵⁷ A housing authority organized under state statute and receiving federal assistance has the power and duty of establishing rentals,⁵⁸ and the burden of establishing that the rentals are unauthorized is on the tenants who challenge them.⁵⁹ In order to authorize a housing authority to terminate a lease for false statements in the application, the statement must be material,⁶⁰ and in this respect a statement will be regarded as material if it is of such a nature as substantially to thwart the purpose for which information was sought and induce action by the authority that it would not otherwise have taken;⁶¹ but if the departure from an accurate statement of truth is so slight that the difference would not affect the decision of any reasonable person the false statement is not material.⁶² A covenant in a lease from a city housing authority by which the tenant released the landlord from liability for any injury resulting from any cause except willful acts, although it operated as a present release in discharge of all liability for negligence, has been held not void as in contravention of public policy.⁶³

Where the voters of a municipality are asked to give their assent to the conveyance of a municipally-owned water and light plant, and to grant a franchise to the purchaser, under the referendum provisions of the constitution, the extent of the authority thus granted to the municipal officers is limited by the terms of the proposal and of the franchise ordinance so submitted at the election held for that purpose.—City Nat. Notice as to disposition of proceeds not required.—Wisconsin Gas

Under some statutes, however, a sale⁷⁴ or lease⁷⁵ of utility property need not be submitted to the voters; and particular provisions requiring approval of the electors have been held to apply only to sales of the entire utility plant or system and not to sales of a small fractional part thereof,⁷⁶ or of certain machinery previously used to generate electricity,⁷⁷ or of surplus utility-owned property,⁷⁸ especially where it was not authorized to acquire such property.⁷⁹ An ordinance which orders the sale of an electric light plant purchased under statutory authority has been held not of a legislative character within the rule limiting the right of initiative and referendum to acts of such a character.⁸⁰ A proceeding to sell a utility plant ordinarily is properly initiated by resolution of the city council,⁸¹ but under some statutes enactment of an ordinance is required in order to effect a sale.⁸²

The validity of a sale by a municipality of its utility plant has been held unaffected by the fact that the sale combined both gas and electric utilities,⁸³ or that the sale of the utility plant was accompanied by a lease of realty and grant of a franchise,⁸⁴ or that additional property was included by mistake in the preliminary agreement for sale;⁸⁵ and a lease contract has been sustained as against the objection that the transaction was unconscionable⁸⁶ or was induced by alleged misrepresentations.⁸⁷ An ordinance authorizing the sale and lease of a municipal

Where the municipality desires to repudiate a lease of its utility system which it regards as disadvantageous, it must surrender the entire consideration received and restore the status quo,⁸⁹ and, if it unduly delays rescission and accepts benefits after discovering an alleged fraud, a bill for cancellation will be dismissed.⁹⁰ Recovery of the plant on the ground of irregularity in the disposition thereof may be precluded where the original transfer had been beneficial to the municipal corporation, the property of the company at the time of suit had been enlarged and improved at great expense, and ownership of the corporation had been sold prior to institution of the suit.⁹¹ A board of trustees appointed by municipal ordinance to control and operate a utility system purchased by the municipality may not maintain suit challenging the validity of a contract by which the municipality leased part of the utility property to another with option to purchase.⁹² Where the remedy at law is adequate, the municipality may not enforce the contract of sale by a bill in equity.⁹³

Where a municipal corporation has leased its utility plant to another, the right to manage the leased property ordinarily is vested in the lessee.⁹⁴ The municipality is entitled under the lease only to the amount of the rental provided for, and it may not claim the profits made by the lessee in the operation of the system in addition to the rental.⁹⁵ The lessee's failure to disclose the amount received by it for an assignment of the lease does not constitute a fraud on the city where the latter has consented to the assignment and has no further interest therein.⁹⁶ A municipality leasing a transmission line to a lessee agreeing to "maintain" it has been held liable for the expense of removing and rebuilding the line on the widening of a highway.⁹⁷

§ 1832. Personal Property

A municipal corporation may have the power to lease personal property from others, and personal property owned absolutely by it may be used by the municipal authorities in their discretion in any manner which is not fraudulent or unlawful.

A statute giving a municipal corporation broad power to purchase and hold property empowers the city to lease personal property from others unless there is in the very nature of the use and control of the property an implied inhibition against a lease.⁹⁸ Personal property owned absolutely by a municipality may be used by the municipal authorities in their discretion in any manner which is not fraudulent or unlawful.⁹⁹ Authority given by an initiative and referendum amendment to refer ordinances and resolutions relating to the sale of municipal property includes personalty as well as realty.¹ A contractor granted the privilege of removing and selling or disposing of certain waste material from a plant of a city is a purchaser for value, where the agreement was entered into by the city to save the expense of removal, and the contractor made improvements and invested capital in order to enjoy the license granted;² and, where certain material removed from the plant has been deposited upon the property of the city with its consent, the contractor does not lose title thereto by his failure to remove it from the property of the city during the life of the contract,³ but after the termination of the contract by the city he is obliged to remove the material within a reasonable time.⁴ The lessee of a city dump cannot recover damages allegedly caused by another depositing waste material on the dump where it is not shown that expense was necessarily incurred by plaintiff in the handling of such waste material, and defendant was within his rights in depositing such material without financial obligation.⁵

License to use fire alarm system. The owner and operator of an electric contrivance designed to furnish private patrons with a means of giving alarms of fire as an adjunct to the general alarm system of the city has, even though possessing the right of any citizen to send in alarms of fire, no vested right to use the appliances of the city for that purpose,⁶ and the mere fact that the city authorities have acquiesced in his act in securing the connection of his system with the city's system does not create a license in his favor.⁷

Gas leases. A contract whereby a city assigned to a private company a half interest in gas leases held by it and in conjunction with the company drilled producing gas wells thereon has been held ultra vires,⁸ and such assignments may be canceled where the municipality has offered to do all that which, in equity and good conscience, was required to be done as a condition precedent to cancellation.⁹

Sale of cause of action. Under a charter empowering the common council to manage and control the finances of the city and all city property, it is within the power of the council to sell a cause of action acquired by compensation of an injured workman.¹⁰

XIX. FISCAL MANAGEMENT, PUBLIC DEBT, SECURITIES, AND TAXATION

A. POWER TO INCUR INDEBTEDNESS AND EXPENDITURE

1. IN GENERAL

§ 1833. In General

A municipal corporation may incur indebtedness or obligations when and only when the power to do so is expressly conferred by constitution, statute, or charter, or is necessarily implied from the powers expressly granted, or is essential to the objects for which the corporation was created. Subject to constitutional restrictions, the legislature may confer on, or withhold from, municipal corporations any fiscal power or prescribe the manner of its exercise.

A municipal corporation may incur indebtedness or create obligations binding on it when and only when the power to do so is expressly conferred on it by constitution, statute, or charter,¹¹ or is necessarily or reasonably implied from the powers expressly granted,¹² or is essential to the objects for which the corporation was created.¹³ Some authorities state that the power to incur debts is not an incident of local municipal government¹⁴ and is not recognized as a right derived from the common law,¹⁵ but is one that can be exercised by a municipality only when conferred on it by charter or legislative act.¹⁶

Subject to constitutional provisions and limitations,¹⁷ the legislature may by charter or general law confer on or withhold from municipal corporations any fiscal power,¹⁸ and may prescribe the manner and conditions of its exercise;¹⁹ but it

(1) As applied to municipal corporations, the term "indebtedness" means what the corporation owes, irrespective of the demands it may hold against others.—Jordan v. Andrus, 69 P. 118, 27 Mont. 22, 26.

(2) "Indebtedness" has also been defined as "a liability voluntarily incurred by the city by express contract, and which it is bound to pay in money"—Overall v. Madisonville, 102 S.W. 278, 282, 125 Ky. 684, 12 L.R.A.,N.S., 433.

Scope of restrictions

It is competent for the people of a state, in their constitution, to place what emphasis they please on restrictions in the creation of debt and in doing so to distinguish between debts differing in kind and necessity.—Twining v. City of Wilmington, 200 S.E. 416, 214 N.C. 655.

Statute held invalid

Statute authorizing court to appoint administrator for insolvent municipal corporation with authority, subject to direction of court making appointment, to control fiscal affairs of municipal corporation was invalid since it imposed legislative and executive functions on judiciary.—City of Enterprise v. State, 69 P. 2d 953, 156 Or. 623.

Constitutional provision operating as limitation

does not, without statute, empower municipality to incur such indebtedness, such authorization operating merely as a limitation.—Oconto Co. v. Town of Townsend, 246 N.W. 410, 210 Wis. 85.

Legislature as source of power

Power to incur indebtedness comes from legislature, not constitution, and constitutional mandate to levy sufficient tax when incurring indebtedness is merely regulatory.—Ohlinger v. Maiden Creek Tp., Berks County, 167 A. 882, 312 Pa. 289, 90 A.L.R. 1227.

Coordination and standardization of laws

The purpose of the local finance law was to coordinate and standardize all the laws relating to or governing the financial affairs and management of all municipal corporations of the state.—Glesen v. Town Board of Richford, 81 N.Y.S. 2d 236, 192 Misc. 427.

cannot, on the one hand, force a municipality to repudiate existing obligations lawfully incurred²⁰ or diminish its power to meet such obligations;²¹ nor can it, on the other hand, authorize or compel a municipality to incur debts or make expenditures in violation of constitutional restrictions.²² Also, the legislature may limit the power of municipalities to incur debts,²³ some constitutional provisions expressly authorizing²⁴ or requiring²⁵ it to do so. A constitutional limitation on the powers of municipal corporations to contract debts does not preclude the legislature from prescribing other limitations,²⁶ unless the limitations prescribed by the legislature conflict with those prescribed by the constitution;²⁷ but the legislature cannot place limitations on a power conferred on municipalities by the constitution,²⁸ except to the extent authorized by other provisions of the constitution.²⁹

In some states the policy of the law, as manifested by constitutional or statutory provisions, or both, is to restrict the contracting of debts by municipal corporations;³⁰ and, generally speaking, a municipality is without power to create, incur, or contract an indebtedness in excess or contravention of limitations prescribed by constitution, statute, or charter.³¹ On the other hand, where particular expenditures are within the powers of a municipality, the court will not, in the absence of fraud, inquire into the motives which actuated the city authorities,³² or substitute its judgment for that of the city authorities as to the wisdom of the expenditure.³³ It has been both affirmed³⁴ and de-

Purposes of restrictions

(1) Constitutional and statutory restraints on the power of municipal corporations to incur indebtedness and issue bonds are intended for the protection of minorities, for the protection of posterity, and for the protection of majorities against their own improvidence, and it is the court's duty to enforce them.—Raynor v. King County, 97 P.2d 696, 2 Wash.2d 199.

(2) The purpose of constitutional provision prohibiting a city from borrowing money, except by act of legislature, save in cases of emergency, is to enable the people themselves to maintain a check on the financial policies of the public officials, and thus protect themselves

nied³⁵ that a limitation on a municipal power of taxation operates as a limitation on the power of a municipality to contract indebtedness. At any rate, municipal powers to incur a debt and to levy taxes for its payment are closely interwoven;³⁶ indeed, it has been held that the power to create a debt to be paid by taxation is the same as the power to tax,³⁷ and the creation of such a debt, the same in effect as the imposition of the tax itself.³⁸ The rules governing the construction of statutes generally are applicable in construing statutes and charter provisions dealing with municipal indebtedness.³⁹ It has been held that a statute prohibiting and penalizing public officials and others for reckless disregard of statutes enacted to safeguard public money should be rigidly enforced.⁴⁰

Limitation as to time for which indebtedness may be created. A constitutional provision, authorizing municipalities to contract indebtedness only for the period of probable usefulness of the object or purpose for which such indebtedness is contracted, includes debts contracted for relief and other proper purposes, which do not involve the construction or acquisition of a physical structure.⁴¹ In order to determine the validity of an indebtedness under such a provision, there must be some basis for a determination that the object or purpose for which the indebtedness is incurred will probably be useful in the future as well as in the immediate present.⁴² The legislature has power to determine the period of probable usefulness of the purpose for which an indebtedness is to be contracted;⁴³ and a transaction whereby the municipality contracts an indebtedness for a longer period than that declared by the legislature to be the period of probable usefulness of the particular purpose involved is invalid.⁴⁴ Such a provision applies only to an indebtedness "contracted for," that is to say, an indebtedness voluntarily assumed and payable at a stipulated time in the future in accordance with stipulated terms.⁴⁵ However, while a judgment for a sum of money does not constitute an indebtedness "contracted,"⁴⁶ such a provision has been held not to prohibit a proposed bond

37. Same test as to validity of power

The power to create a debt to be discharged by taxation is the same as the power to impose a tax and the validity of such power must be judged by the same constitutional limitations as are applicable in determining validity of power to impose a tax.

issue for the purpose of paying judgments recovered against the municipality, where the bonds are payable within the period in which the object for which they are issued continues to serve a useful purpose.⁴⁷

§ 1834. Effect of Invalidity of Debt or Expenditure

Unauthorized debts and expenditures do not ordinarily create any municipal liability, although, in the case of an unauthorized loan, the proceeds of which are applied to a proper purpose, recovery may be had on principles of equity for money had and received. Invalid debts or expenditures may in a proper case be validated by ratification or curative legislation.

Unauthorized debts and expenditures do not as a general rule create municipal liability.⁴⁸ A contract creating an unauthorized or prohibited indebtedness is void or at least unenforceable,⁴⁹ and a municipal corporation is ordinarily not liable on an implied contract involving an expenditure exceeding statutory limitations;⁵⁰ it is sometimes,⁵¹ although not always,⁵² held that the municipality is not liable on a quantum meruit. Unless authorized by valid charter or statutory provision to pay debts which constitute moral obligations on its part, as discussed infra § 1835, a municipal corporation is without power to pay claims or debts which are not its legal obligations;⁵³ and, when the money of a municipality is paid out on a contract or for an indebtedness which the municipality had no authority to make or incur, it may be recovered back.⁵⁴ A judgment against a municipality on a contract illegal and void for lack of any appropriation therefor is void;⁵⁵ and parties who connive with municipal officials to procure such a fraudulent judgment are liable to innocent persons injured thereby or to the municipality.⁵⁶ Warrants issued in payment of an indebtedness incurred in excess of the statutory or constitutional limitation on indebtedness are unenforceable;⁵⁷ but, where the limitation was not exceeded at the time an indebtedness was incurred, the issuance of a warrant in payment of the indebtedness is authorized, even though between the time of the incurring of the indebtedness and the issuance of the warrant other indebtedness exceeding the limit had been incurred.⁵⁸ Notwithstanding a municipal purchase of property subject to a mortgage is invalid as increasing the indebtedness of the municipality beyond the constitutional limit, as discussed infra § 1852, the equities of the municipality in the property will be protected on a foreclosure of the mortgage.⁵⁹

Unauthorized loan. When money is borrowed by a municipal corporation without authority of law, but is used and applied for a legitimate purpose, the corporation is liable on principles of equity and justice, as on an implied assumpsit, for money had and received.⁶⁰ However, this principle does

The statute, enacted in compliance with the constitutional provision, determining that period of probable usefulness of an indebtedness for payment of judgments against municipality not related to capital account is five years, constitutes a legislative construction that the constitution authorizes a municipality to contract an indebtedness payable at later date for purpose of funding judgments, where such funding would serve a continuing useful purpose.—Cherey v. City of Long Beach, supra.

BASIS of determining period of usefulness

When applied to payment of indebtedness represented by judgments against a municipal corporation, the "probable period of usefulness" is to be construed as the period over which payment of the judgments in annual installments can be spread without inflicting undue hardship on the taxpayers.—Cherey v. City of Long Beach, 17 N.Y.S.2d 541, 258 App.Div. 986, affirmed 28 N.E.2d 945, 282 N.Y. 382, 127 A.L.R. 1210.

not apply where there is an express prohibition of the power to borrow money,⁶¹ or where the borrowed money is not used for a public purpose or is used for a prohibited purpose.⁶²

Ratification. Municipal indebtedness in excess of a constitutional limitation cannot be made good by ratification,⁶³ unless, at the time of ratification, the indebtedness does not exceed the limit;⁶⁴ nor can a special indebtedness for street improvements incurred by a municipality, whose incorporation was void and which could not in any event have been a liability against the general taxpayers, be so ratified by the corporation, after it has been legally created, as to convert the liability to a general one enforceable against all the taxpayers;⁶⁵ but an expenditure made in excess of a limitation imposed by a municipal ordinance may be ratified by the municipal council.⁶⁶ Where it is provided by statute that no contract shall be made or expense incurred by a municipality, unless an appropriation therefor shall have been previously made, a contract or expenditure in violation of this provision can be ratified only by making an appropriation expressly for its performance.⁶⁷ Ratification of a payment which is not illegal in the sense of being ultra vires precludes the municipality from recovering back the money paid.⁶⁸

Curative legislation. A municipal contract, expenditure, or appropriation invalid when made may be cured by subsequent legislation,⁶⁹ and payment thereof authorized⁷⁰ by subsequent legislation, or by subsequent legislation coupled with ratification of the indebtedness by the electors,⁷¹ unless the invalidity results from a violation of a constitutional inhibition,⁷² and even in that case it may be validated by a constitutional amendment⁷³ and enabling act.⁷⁴

Jurisdictional "defects" with respect to incurring of municipal expenses refers to the failure on the part of officers to perform acts which are jurisdictional as to them but not as to the legislature, and such defects may be cured by a curative or validating act; but jurisdictional "requirements" refers to acts which are jurisdictional to the legislature itself because they are prescribed by the constitution, and failure to comply with such requirements cannot be cured by legislative acts.—Weber v. 2. PURPOSE OF INDEBTEDNESS OR EXPENDITURE

§ 1835. In General

- a. General rules
- b. Public or private purposes
- c. Moral obligations

a. General Rules

Municipal corporations may expend money or incur indebtedness only for purposes authorized by law, but within constitutional and statutory limitations each municipality may determine for itself the portion of its debt incurring power to be used for any authorized purpose.

A municipal council cannot expend public funds for any purpose it may desire;⁷⁵ in expending money municipal corporations are rigidly restricted to the purposes authorized by law⁷⁶ expressly or by implication,⁷⁷ and, where authority is expressly delegated to a municipality to raise and apply money for a special purpose, such authority must be strictly construed,⁷⁸ and the purpose strictly followed;⁷⁹ but within constitutional and statutory limitations each municipality is permitted⁸⁰ and required⁸¹ to determine for itself the portion of its debt incurring power which shall be used for any authorized municipal purpose, and, in the absence of any reason therefor, there is no presumption that funds will be used for an illegal purpose.⁸² Under a statute to such effect, a municipality is permitted and required to incur liabilities to meet mandatory expenditures required by law;⁸³

and, in general, a municipal corporation has authority to appropriate money for the payment of its debts.⁸⁴

b. Public or Private Purposes

Public funds of a municipal corporation may not be expended for a private purpose, and in many states constitutional provisions expressly prohibit municipal corporations from giving or loaning money or credit to, or in aid of, private individuals or associations.

It is generally held, in some cases under express constitutional or statutory provisions, that public funds can be appropriated and expended by a municipal corporation only for public purposes,⁸⁵ and, when so provided by constitution, statute, or charter, no indebtedness can be incurred or appropriation made except for municipal or corporate purposes;⁸⁶ but, in the absence of constitutional restriction, the legislature may authorize a municipal corporation to incur indebtedness or make expenditures for purposes which are public, although not strictly municipal.⁸⁷ A municipal corporation cannot expend⁸⁸ or be authorized by the legislature to expend⁸⁹ its public funds for private purposes making of expenditures to meet an emergency is in the matter of declaring an emergency and statute does not give council discretion in meeting "mandatory expenditures required by law."—State ex rel. Helena Housing Authority v. City Council of City of Helena, supra.

"Public purpose" defined

(1) "Public purpose," as regards expenditure of municipal funds, means a purpose within the frame of governmental and proprietary power given to the particular municipality to be exercised for the welfare of its inhabitants and others coming within the municipal care, and involves reasonable connection with the convenience and necessity of the particular municipality whose aid is extended in its promotion.—Greensboro-High Point Airport Authority v. Johnson, 36 S.E.2d 803, 809, 226 N.C. 1.

(2) A "public purpose," for which municipal funds may be appropriated, generally has for its objective the promotion of the general welfare, security, prosperity, and contentment of all the inhabitants of the municipality.—City Affairs Committee of Jersey City v. Board of Com'rs of Jersey City, 46 A.2d 425, 427, 134 N.J.Law 180.

"Public funds" means funds belonging to any political subdivision of the state, more especially taxes, customs, moneys, etc., raised by operation of some general law and appropriated by the government to the discharge of its obligations or for some public or governmental purpose.—State ex rel. St. Louis Police Relief Ass'n v. Igoo, 107 S.W.2d 929, 340 Mo. 1166.

Donation for public purposes

(1) A city may aid a public municipal purpose by donation.—Briggs v. City of Raleigh, 141 S.E. 597, 195 N.C. 223.

(2) A city has constitutional power to donate money for public purposes in instances where legislature has designated activities to be benefited.

islature may be prohibited by constitutional provision from authorizing any municipal corporation to appropriate money for,⁹⁴ or make a gift⁹⁵ or loan its credit to,⁹⁶ any individual or association. Such provisions are mandatory;⁹⁷ and are generally construed as directed against benefits at public expense attempted in behalf of individuals, corporations, or associations, acting independently and conducting some enterprise of their own such as is usually conducted for profit and is commercial in nature.⁹⁸

A municipality may not authorize the payment of claims against the corporation arising under contracts ultra vires,⁹⁹ or any payment that may tend to defraud the municipal treasury.¹ Since the power of taxation is limited to taxation for public purposes, as discussed infra § 1987, the legislature has no power to authorize a municipal corporation to lend its aid to private, as distinguished from public, enterprises, and thereby incur an indebtedness which may necessitate the exercise of the power of taxation to liquidate.² However,

In determining whether an appropriation of public funds is a gift within constitutional provision denying legislature power to authorize any political corporation to make a gift of public money or thing of value, the primary and fundamental subject of inquiry is as to whether the money is to be used for a public or private purpose, and, if it is for a public purpose, it is not, generally speaking, a gift.—San Bernardino County v. Way, 117 P.2d 354, 18 Cal. 2d 647—City of Oakland v. Garrison, 228 P. 433, 194 Cal. 298—Sacramento-Yolo Port Dist v. Rodda, Cal.App., 204 P.2d 372—City of Ojai v. Chaffee, 140 P.2d 116, 119, 60 Cal.App.2d 54.

Collected or uncollected taxes

As far as constitutional prohibition against empowering political corporations to make a gift of public money or thing of value is concerned, no effective distinction can be made between the contribution of tax moneys after collection and the contribution of the taxes themselves.—San Bernardino County v. Way, 117 P.2d 354, 18 Cal.2d 647.

Release of liability

Act giving public service commission exclusive jurisdiction to regulate rates and service of enumerated utilities was not violative of constitutional provision prohibiting legislature from releasing or extinguishing indebtedness or "liability" of any corporation or individual to any municipality, since provision referred to fixed money liability and not to a contractual right to fix such rates.—Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. where municipal corporations have a fund out of which they can pay the debts which they contract, it may be within the power of the legislature to authorize them to use such fund in aid of projects strictly private or personal but which would in a secondary manner contribute to the public good.³

There is no universal test for distinguishing between a purpose which is public or municipal and, therefore, a proper object of municipal expenditure and one which is private and, therefore, an improper object to which to devote public money.⁴ Each case must be decided in the light of the existing conditions,⁵ with respect to the objects sought to be accomplished,⁶ the degree and manner in which that object affects the public welfare,⁷ and the nature and character of the thing to be done;⁸ but the court will give weight to a legislative determination of what is a municipal purpose,⁹ as well as widespread opinion and general practice which regard as city purposes some things which may not be such by absolute necessity,¹⁰ or on a narrow interpretation of constitutional provisions.¹¹ Where an appropriation of public funds is primarily for public purposes, it is not necessarily rendered violative of constitutional provisions against gifts and loans of public credit by an incidental result which may be of private benefit.¹² On the other hand, if the result is chiefly that of private benefit, an incidental or even ostensible public purpose will not save its constitutionality.¹³ A purpose may be a public one so as to be within a municipal power to appropriate funds therefor, even though it is not a necessary purpose.¹⁴ It has been laid down as a general rule that the question whether the performance of an act or the accomplishment of a specific purpose constitutes a "public purpose" for which municipal funds may be lawfully disbursed rests in the judgment of the municipal authorities, and the courts will not assume to substitute their judgment for that of the authorities unless the latter's exercise of judgment or discretion is shown to have been unquestionably abused.¹⁵

A municipal corporation is ordinarily without power to appropriate money for the payment of an unenforceable debt or claim, even if it constitutes a moral or equitable obligation; but the legislature may in a proper case authorize payment of such an obligation.

A municipal corporation has been held to be without power to appropriate money for the payment of a debt barred by the statute of limitations,¹⁶ or for payment of an unenforceable claim, even though it constitutes a moral or equitable obligation.¹⁷ However, the payment by municipal corporations of claims which, although invalid or illegal, are just and equitable and constitute moral obligations is sometimes authorized by charter or statute,¹⁸ and such provisions are not unconstitutional;¹⁹ and, although it has been stated broadly that gifts supported by moral considerations are not within constitutional prohibitions against gifts,²⁰ it has also been held that the legislature may not, under the guise of fulfilling a moral obligation, authorize or require the grant of public funds to an individual in the absence of any legal, equitable, or moral right thereto,²¹ or authorize the payment of sums which, although they might be considered morally due, actually constitute no more than gifts or gratuities because the municipality has received no equivalent therefor.²²

§ 1836. Buildings, Improvements, and Utilities

A municipal corporation may appropriate money or incur indebtedness for the acquisition and maintenance of public buildings, improvements, and utilities, provided rules and provisions restricting expenditures and indebtedness to public and municipal purposes are not thereby violated.

A public improvement which may be regarded as for the common benefit and enjoyment of all the citizens of a municipality is a public and municipal purpose within the meaning of constitutional provisions;²³ and, in order to make such improvements,

The expenditure of public money in recognition of military services, even long after such services have been rendered, although such expenditure is directly for private benefit of persons rendering such services, is a "public purpose."—Opinions of the Justices, 67 N.E.2d 588, 320 Mass. 773, 165 A.L.R. 807.

Award to person injured by police

Commissioners' order for payment of claim against city for personal injuries resulting from being struck by motorcycle driven by traffic policeman attempting to catch speeder was void, since payment would be unconstitutional as constituting gift, in view of lack of legal liability of municipality.—*Tompkins v. "Moral obligation" defined

A "moral obligation" which can be recognized by legislature and made collectable from the state or its political divisions is one which cannot be enforced by action but which is binding on the party who incurs it in conscience and according to natural justice, or is a duty which would be enforceable by law were it not for some positive rule, which, with a view to general benefit, exempts the party in that particular instance

a municipal corporation may exercise its ordinary power to incur indebtedness,²⁴ although, when following the special assessment method, it cannot pledge its general credit,²⁵ unless expressly authorized.²⁶ A municipality may incur indebtedness for building a bridge²⁷ or tunnel,²⁸ and the legislature may properly authorize it to pay damages resulting to property from the construction.²⁹ Also, provision may be made for drainage;³⁰ for the construction of a sewerage system;³¹ for acquisition, development, and maintenance of an airport;³² for development of a bay³³ or improvement of a waterfront;³⁴ for flood control;³⁵ and for surveys for a ship canal.³⁶ Since the elimination of a grade crossing³⁷ and the relocation of streets in connection therewith³⁸ are municipal or corporate purposes, a municipal corporation may contribute to the expense thereof without violating constitutional provisions. The acquisition and maintenance of public parks and recreational centers thereby securing pure air and healthful rest and recreation to the people of a city are public or city purposes.³⁹ Also, a municipality may, without violating constitutional provisions, issue warrants for the completion of a public improvement which has been constructed in part by the commissioners of an improvement district embracing the same area as the municipality.⁴⁰ Provision for the creation of a revolving fund for the purpose of securing prompt payment of special improvement district obligations has been held not to be violative of a constitutional prohibition against donation of its funds or loans of its credit by a municipality.⁴¹ However, it has also been held that a statute authorizing a municipality to issue bonds to refund special improvement warrants to the extent of special assessment deficiencies for which it was not otherwise generally liable violates a constitutional prohibition against public credits or donations.⁴² Under a statute authorizing payment of equitable claims not constituting obligations legally binding, a municipal corporation is not limited, in paying a claim by one who has made public improvements for its benefit, to claimant's outlay, but may pay him his customary profit as well;⁴³ the payment, however, must not exceed the value of the work.⁴⁴

Buildings and sites therefor. A municipal corporation may legally expend funds for the erection of a building which is intended primarily for a strictly public use,⁴⁵ even though it may incidentally and occasionally be devoted to uses which are not public⁴⁶ or there is a secret intent on the part of certain individuals to use the proposed structure for purposes not strictly public;⁴⁷ but it has been held that the power to incur indebtedness for municipal buildings is not to be implied from the duty to erect them.⁴⁸ A statute authorizing a municipality to issue certificates to pay for the construction of a particular building and designating the funds out of which such certificates may be paid has been held to constitute a legislative declaration that the construction of such a building is a municipal purpose.⁴⁹ Buildings for the erection of which it has been held that a municipality may make appropriations or incur indebtedness include a city hall,⁵⁰ a market house,⁵¹ an armory,⁵² and a public hall or auditorium,⁵³ but not a grand army hall⁵⁴ or an opera house.⁵⁵ The legislature may authorize a municipal corporation to incur indebtedness or expend funds for the purpose of purchasing real property in the municipality to be donated to the state as a site for a state building.⁵⁶ Under some constitutional provisions, the council cannot appropriate money to aid in the building of a courthouse;⁵⁷ but under other constitutions the legislature may authorize a municipality to pay or become indebted for the cost of erecting a courthouse or other public buildings necessary to a county seat,⁵⁸ although such power has been held not granted by a statute authorizing a municipality to donate money or bonds in aid of public improvements.⁵⁹

Improvement and maintenance of highways, streets and sidewalks. Expenditures for the improvement of the highways and streets of a municipality are for a corporate⁶⁰ and public⁶¹ purpose, and a municipality may, without violation of constitutional or statutory provisions, appropriate or expend funds for payment of at least part of the cost of their construction, maintenance or repair,⁶² including expenses of opening, widening, extending,⁶³ or paving⁶⁴ them; but in resurfacing or repairing a street a municipal corporation is not

If the dominating motive for the erection of a building by a municipality is a strictly public use, the expenditure for it is legal under the constitution, although incidentally it may be devoted occasionally to uses that are not public, but, if the project of the municipality is merely colorable, masking under the pretext of a public purpose, a general design to enter into the private business of maintaining a building for gain, or devoting it mainly to any other than its public use as a gathering place for citizens generally, such an attempt would be a perversion of power and a nullity, and no public funds could be appropriated for it.—State ex rel. authorized to loan its credit for the purchase of materials to be used in renewing or reconstructing the roadbed and tracks of a street railroad.⁶⁵ A statute, authorizing the application of village funds to the care and maintenance of streets which the trustees are unable to accept by dedication and which are, therefore, mere private rights of way, has been held unconstitutional;⁶⁶ but it has also been held that the legislature may constitutionally authorize municipal expenditure of money for removal of ice and snow from ways in private ownership but open to public use as expenditures for a "public purpose," since such expenditures are temporary and concurrent with public use.⁶⁷ The moral obligation to pay damages resulting to real property from the change of grade of a street may be recognized,⁶⁸ but not in favor of a landowner who did not acquire title until after the grade was changed.⁶⁹ Except in some jurisdictions,⁷⁰ it is not improper for a municipality making street or sidewalk improvements payable out of special assessments to raise the funds in advance of the collection of the assessments, collect and enforce the assessments, and reimburse itself therefrom.⁷¹ Purchase and installation of parking meters do not violate a constitutional prohibition against use of public funds in private enterprises;⁷² and a municipality may procure such meters⁷³ and pay therefor out of revenue to be derived from their use.⁷⁴

Public utilities. Indebtedness may be incurred or expenditures may be made by a municipality for the lighting of streets and public places,⁷⁵ for the furnishing or supplying of water⁷⁶ for the purchase⁷⁷ and operation⁷⁸ of a waterworks system, for the construction of electric transmission systems and lines,⁷⁹ and for the construction of a subway.⁸⁰ A constitutional provision granting to any incorporated city or town the power to become indebted for public utilities is not intended as a limitation on the powers of the legislature and does not prevent the latter from conferring such powers on other municipal corporations, such as water improvement districts.⁸¹ It has been held that a constitutional provision authorizing a city to incur additional indebtedness for an electric light plant must not be given a technical or strict construction so as to defeat the purpose of its adoption.⁸² A constitutional provision allowing cities to incur indebtedness beyond that ordinarily allowed for the purchase or construction of public utilities is part of the public policy of the state.⁸³

(1) Statute providing that a city owning a system for distribution, but having inadequate supply, may contract for purchase of water as deemed appropriate by its governing body or bind itself at any agreed price for all water taken by the city and not resold is direct authority to pay for a part of the water from the general revenue of the city; and, under a provision of such a statute that city shall be obligated to pay for water solely out of net revenues if contract so provides, when no provision is made in contract that water be paid for solely out of water revenues, city may make any or all payments for water a general obligation and may provide both that payments be a general obligation and made out of water revenue funds.—Harding v. The power of a municipality to incur indebtedness or make expenditures in respect of public utilities may be exercised by a contract with an individual or corporation supplying the product or services in question;⁸⁴ or, when so authorized by constitution, statute, or charter, the municipality itself may acquire⁸⁵ or construct⁸⁶ a public utility, and operate it⁸⁷ or provide for its operation by some one else under a lease not in perpetuity;⁸⁸ but it may not incur expense for supervisors and starters of a bus line under an agreement giving the owner of the line the entire revenue therefrom;⁸⁹ and, even though a municipality may have a right to levy a special assessment for the purpose of maintaining and operating an electric light plant, it does not follow that it can anticipate its future general revenues for the purpose of erecting such a plant.⁹⁰ A municipal corporation owning and operating a public utility system may make expenditures or incur indebtedness for an extension thereof.⁹¹ An improvement district for the construction of waterworks and a lighting system is not a private enterprise within a constitutional provision against the pledging of public money.⁹²

Housing. The expenditure of public money by a municipal corporation for the clearance of slum areas and the construction of low-rent housing is a valid expenditure of public money for a public purpose.⁹³ It has also been held that the making of expenditures and incurring indebtedness for the housing of inhabitants of the municipality generally,⁹⁴ or more particularly, of veterans and their families,⁹⁵ is, in the light of an existing acute housing shortage, a proper exercise of power to expend money for a public purpose. Reasons for rule

thority law is to eliminate slums and unsafe and unsanitary buildings and the providing of low-rent housing with public funds is only a means by which main object can be accomplished—Allydorn Realty Corporation v. Holyoke Housing Authority, 23 N.E.2d 665, 304 Mass. 288.

(2) In eradicating the slum menace under housing authority acts, the housing authority lightens the burden of the city in protecting against disease, crime, and immorality, and hence public funds of the city may be used to aid in establishment of the housing authority.—Lennox v. Housing Authority of City of Omaha, 290 N.W. 451, 137 Neb. 582, supplemented 291 N.W. 100, 137 Neb. 582.

94. R.I.—Opinion to the Governor, 63 A.2d 724.

Extent of authority

Statute authorizing city to provide needed housing accommodations limits city's authority to engage in any housing project to an expenditure not to exceed specified amount, and city can proceed in such an enterprise only in the manner and to the extent prescribed by the statute to relieve a public emergency which legislature declared to be existing at time statute was adopted.—Opinion to the Governor, supra.

§ 1837. Payments to Officers, Employees, or Persons Rendering Services

A municipal corporation may pay or be authorized to pay for services rendered by an officer, employee, or other person; in a proper case a municipal corporation may appropriate money for the payment of the salary of an absent or illegally dismissed officer or employee, for pay for services rendered by an officer or employee, or for insurance or pensions for the benefit of its employees.

While, as a general rule, a municipal corporation cannot legally bestow a gratuity on an officer or employee⁹⁷ or, in the absence of proper authorization, expend public funds to pay a person rendering service in furtherance of a private purpose,⁹⁸ a municipality may pay,⁹⁹ or the legislature may authorize or direct it to pay,¹ for services rendered by an officer, employee, or other person, without violating constitutional prohibitions of gifts donations, or gratuities.² A moral or equitable obligation to pay for valuable services rendered is sufficient to justify the action of the municipality in paying,³ or the action of the legislature in authorizing or requiring the municipality to make payment.⁴

A municipality may appropriate or expend money for the employment of counsel for the benefit of the municipality,⁵ but not for the services of attorneys employed in suits in which it had no interest⁶ or attorneys not employed by direction of the council.⁷ Where the finances and records of a village are in a chaotic condition, the employment of an expert accountant to examine the books, report the taxes due and payable, and install a proper system of accounting, is for a village purpose.⁸ Making of an assessment for a municipality, when properly and lawfully authorized, is of a public and not a private nature,⁹ and an appropriation to pay for the necessary work done in connection with the assessment is for a public purpose.¹⁰ However, a municipal council is without power to appropriate funds for the making of a new assessment which, when made, will not have any validity.¹¹ In the absence of legislative authority,

Retroactive pay raise

(1) Transportation board's grant of retroactive pay increases to its employees, pursuant to agreement to make any such increases retroactive to specified date, if employees continued working after such date, was not gift prohibited by constitution, but was supported by valid and legal consideration.—Timmerman v. City of New York, 69 N.Y.S.2d 102, affirmed 70 N.Y.S.2d 140, 272 App.Div. 758.

(2) Payments of retroactive additional compensation by municipal port commission to longshoremen pursuant to port manager's agreement that, if members of local union would continue to work for port, the port would conform to conditions of contract being negotiated by international union with association of private employers of longshoremen, would not be an unconstitutional gift of public moneys.—Christie v. Port of Olympia, 179 P.2d 294, 27 Wash.2d 534.

An arrangement between city and merchants and citizens protective association for joint employment of a police patrolman was not beyond corporate power of city as involving payment of public money for private purpose, where evidence showed that patrolman protected not only the premises of the association's members but all business premises of city, and that patrolman was authorized to perform the duties of a regular patrolman.—Krawiec v. the board of trustees of a village has no power to pay the premiums on the official bonds of its officers.¹² A charter provision making the treasurer custodian of municipal funds and requiring him to keep accounts and report the state of the treasury implies the power to contract for the compensation of an auditor of his books;¹³ and, as an incident to a power to sell municipal realty at public auction, a municipality may contract to pay compensation for a broker's services.¹⁴

Absent or illegally dismissed officers or employees. A municipal council may lawfully appropriate money for the payment of the salary of an officer or employee during the period of his illegal dismissal,¹⁵ and it is held that constitutional prohibitions of gifts of municipal funds are not violated by statutes requiring a municipality to pay such a claim,¹⁶ or, in the case of officers and employees engaged in military service, the difference between their salary and their military pay;¹⁷ but it has also been held that a statute, which requires a municipality to pay salary to a duly elected officer for the period of time that the duties of the office were actually performed by another person claiming to have been elected to the office, is unconstitutional.¹⁸ A statute providing that an employee of a municipal corporation shall be paid

Reimbursement for losses or expenses. Except in some jurisdictions,²⁰ an appropriation made by a municipality to a municipal officer to reimburse or indemnify him for expenses or losses incurred while in the performance of his duties is valid.²¹ A municipality may not pay,²² nor can the legislature authorize it to pay,²³ the expenses incurred by a public officer in defending himself against a criminal prosecution; but it has been held that a municipal corporation may appropriate funds,²⁴ or the legislature may authorize it to appropriate funds,²⁵ for the necessary expenses incurred by him in defending against charges arising out of acts done by him while in the bona fide discharge of his official duties.

Pensions and insurance. A municipal corporation may, without violating constitutional provisions, take out or pay for group²⁶ or workmen's compensation²⁷ insurance for the benefit of its employees. Also, in most jurisdictions constitutional prohibitions against gifts to individuals or expenditure of public funds for private purposes are not violated by provisions for pensions to firemen, policemen, or other municipal employees,²⁸ or their

Payment by a municipal corporation of a sum of money to cover expenses and salary of policeman while attending the police academy for training was for a public purpose because the object of the expenditure was the maintenance of law and order which is an essential function of government, and such expenditure does not grant an exclusive "emolument or privilege" to the policeman contrary to the constitutional provision that no man or set of men is entitled to exclusive or separate emoluments or privileges from the community, but in consideration of public services.—Green v. § 1838. Investigations, Campaigns, and Lobbying

There is conflict among the authorities as to the power of municipal corporations to expend money in lobbying, campaigning, or otherwise promoting or opposing particular legislative action or action of an administrative body.

There is some conflict among the authorities as to the right of municipal corporations to appropriate funds or incur indebtedness for the purpose of influencing legislation affecting its interests. Thus, some authorities hold that a municipality may expend its public funds for the protection and promotion of its well-being before the legislature;³⁵ that it may appropriate or expend money to compensate or reimburse a person for his services and expenses in endeavoring to obtain the passage of state or federal legislation affecting the municipality;³⁶ and that it is justified, if acting bona fide, in applying its funds in opposing proposed legislation or referendum to the people which would affect its existence, or materially injure its powers as a corporation, although no such power is expressly given to it by its incorporating act;³⁷ and it has further been held that in order to accomplish these purposes it may incur expenditures by the publication of pamphlets, circulars, advertisements, or radio addresses.³⁸ On the other hand, it has frequently been held that a municipal corporation has no right to appropriate its funds to promote³⁹ or oppose⁴⁰ the passage of legislation affecting its interests or the taking of particular action by an administrative body.⁴¹ So, it is held that a municipal corporation is without authority to incur indebtedness or appropriate funds for the conduct of a campaign to secure the election of the city as the state capital,⁴² or to secure a favorable vote on a proposed bond issue,⁴³ even though conducting such a campaign is deemed necessary to correct misinformation disseminated by opponents of the proposal.⁴⁴

A municipality may not expend public money for investigation of a municipal department, where there is no just reason for such an investigation so as to constitute it a public purpose.⁴⁵ Also, a municipality has been held to be without authority, under its charter, to incur indebtedness or appropriate funds for the expense of extensive investigation by the mayor.⁴⁶

§ 1839. Celebrations, Entertainments, and Sports

Some authorities hold that a municipal corporation has no power to expend municipal funds for celebrations, but others hold that a municipal corporation may, at least when authorized by charter or statute, appropriate money for celebration of public events; a municipality may not ordinarily expend money for entertainment.

According to some authorities a municipal corporation has no power to incur indebtedness or appropriate municipal funds for celebrations, even of patriotic holidays or anniversaries of historical events;⁴⁷ but other authorities have held that the celebration or commemoration of public events is a proper purpose for municipal appropriations,⁴⁸ at least where an appropriation for such a purpose is authorized by charter or statute.⁴⁹ Also, unless expressly authorized,⁵⁰ a municipal corporation is without power to incur indebtedness or appropriate public funds for the purpose of providing entertainment of any character⁵¹ for either its citizens⁵² or its guests;⁵³ and, regardless of its power to incur liability in the first instance, where the entertainment is provided and funds are raised under private auspices without official authorization, it is without power to devote public funds for the purpose of supplying a deficit in the funds raised.⁵⁴ While the legislature may expressly authorize a municipal corporation to incur indebtedness for the acquisition of a golf course, to be impartially conducted in the interest of the local public,⁵⁵ authority on the part of the municipality to incur indebtedness for this purpose will not be implied from general powers conferred on it.⁵⁶ Constitutional prohibitions against gifts of municipal money or property must be observed by the legislature in providing for the use of a municipal playground for an outdoor exhibition, game, or contest at which an admission is charged.⁵⁷ strictions, a municipal corporation may appropriate funds for the establishment and maintenance of schools and libraries.

Since the establishment and maintenance of schools are a municipal purpose,⁵⁸ an appropriation of funds for the support of schools is for a municipal purpose.⁵⁹ When authorized by statute municipal funds may be appropriated to a textile school,⁶⁰ a manual training school,⁶¹ a reform school,⁶² or a free library.⁶³ However, in pledging its revenues for school purposes, a municipality must keep within the authority conferred by charter or statute.⁶⁴ Also, a municipal corporation cannot, in violation of constitutional provisions, make a gift to a school district which is a separate and distinct political subdivision;⁶⁵ nor can the legislature authorize it to do so;⁶⁶ but, where the right of a municipality to contribute to an educational institution is questionable, a presumption arises that its disposition of public funds is a payment or exchange for value rather than a gift.⁶⁷ Donations by a municipality to a state normal college are upheld when authorized by a valid statute;⁶⁸ but not otherwise.⁶⁹

A contract binding a lessee of a municipally owned waterworks to furnish water free of cost to school-houses, including parochial schoolhouses, is not violative of a constitutional prohibition against the use of municipal property or credit in aid of any school under the control of any religious denomination, where under the lease the water is owned by the lessee.⁷⁰

§ 1841. Aid of Welfare, Charitable, or Religious Associations or Institutions

Provided it does not violate constitutional provisions relating to municipal expenditures, a municipal corporation may, when authorized to do so by statute or charter, appropriate money in aid of welfare or charitable associations or institutions.

An appropriation or expenditure of money by a municipal corporation in aid of a welfare or charitable association or institution is valid when authorized by charter or statutory provision⁷¹ and not prohibited by constitutional provision,⁷² but of course not when it falls within a constitutional prohibition and the construction placed thereon.⁷³

Town authorities cannot pledge town's faith and credit to procure grant by federal Public Works Administration for erection of public library, which is not necessary town expense, without majority vote of town electors, or expend public money for equipment and maintenance of such institution.—Westbrook v.

Middle Coal Field Poor Dist., 197 A. 334, 329 Pa. 390.

Necessity of statutory authority

Poor relief and care and welfare of children are matters of state-wide concern, and, hence, authority for expending public funds by local authorities for such purposes must be found in general laws enacted by the general assembly.—Ferrie v. Sweeney, Ohio Com.Pl., 72 N.E.2d 128.

Expenditure for private purpose

The bestowal of care at public expense on children of those whose financial condition does not require it is an improper expenditure of public funds for a private purpose; hence, adoption of city ordinance appropriating public funds for temporary operation of day care centers for children of working mothers is irrespective of the ability of children's parents to pay the cost thereof was not in the exercise of municipality's powers of local self-government, and ordinance is invalid as constituting an expenditure of public funds for a

Some constitutional provisions prohibit the use of municipal funds in aid of any church, sect, denomination, or sectarian institution.⁷⁴ Except in some jurisdictions,⁷⁵ a municipal appropriation or concession to a firemen's relief association,⁷⁶ as well as a statute authorizing or requiring it,⁷⁷ is valid, unless the statute is so worded as to allow participation in the relief fund by firemen who are residents of the municipality, even though they may never have rendered service to that particular municipality.⁷⁸ Municipal corporations have been held empowered to erect or maintain hospitals,⁷⁹ or to enter into arrangements or contracts to furnish financial aid to others in the erection or maintenance of hospitals.⁸⁰ A provision for establishment of veterans' recreational centers is not violative of a constitutional prohibition against conferring special privileges on individuals not in consideration of public service, since military service constitutes public service.⁸¹

§ 1842. Aid of Private Manufacturing Establishment

A municipal corporation may not appropriate money or incur indebtedness in aid of a private manufacturing establishment.

As a general rule, a municipal corporation cannot incur indebtedness or grant money for the purpose of encouraging the establishment of a private manufacturing enterprise;⁸² nor can the legislature authorize it to do so;⁸³ but a statute authorizing the use of municipal funds for a project which will incidentally benefit private manufacturing establishments is not invalid where the expenditure is for a public purpose and does not constitute an appropriation to private individuals or corporations.⁸⁴

§ 1843. Indebtedness Incurred before Incorporation, Change of Charter, or Dissolution

The legislature may impose on a municipal corporation liability for debts contracted by it before its incorporation; where a municipal corporation obtains a new or amended charter, the liabilities of the corporation in its prior form survive, and the legislature may expressly provide for their payment; debts and obligations of a municipal corporation, as well as the remedies for their enforcement, generally survive dissolution of the corporation.

Unless expressly authorized by legislation, a municipal corporation has no authority to appropriate money for the payment of expenses incurred by individuals, prior to its corporate existence, in procuring the passage of its charter.⁸⁵ The legislature, however, may impose on a municipal corporation debts contracted by it before it was lawfully incorporated.⁸⁶

On obtaining new or amended charter. Regardless of whether, on reincorporation or reorganization of a municipality, the corporation in its new form is technically regarded as a new corporation or as a continuation of the former body, as discussed supra § 96, and even though there may private purpose and as contravening the provisions of the Child Welfare Act.—Ferrie v. Sweeney, Ohio Com. Pl., 72 N.E.2d 128.

As current operating expense

Claim by nonprofit corporation for money expended for poor relief under contract with city promising reimbursement therefor was a "current operating expense" and fell within category of indebtedness which could not be incurred by municipality under statutory provisions.—*Industrial Rescue Mission v. be some changes in name, boundaries, powers, or officers;⁸⁷ it is a general rule that, in the absence of express provision to the contrary, where the territory and inhabitants are substantially the same, the corporation in its new form retains or succeeds to the liabilities of the corporation in its prior form;⁸⁸ and even where, after dissolution, only a portion of the territory of the dissolved corporation became reincorporated, a pro rata liability has been adjudged and enforced against the new municipality as a pro tanto successor to the old.⁸⁹ When granting a new charter to, and changing the name of, a municipality, the legislature may expressly provide for the payment of liabilities previously incurred,⁹⁰ and such provision is not unconstitutional,⁹¹ although there may be cases in which it is inapplicable,⁹² or where the performance of specified conditions is necessary in order to render it operative.⁹³ An issuance of bonds prior to the taking effect of a charter amendment authorizing it cannot be upheld.⁹⁴ However; bonds previously authorized may be issued notwithstanding a change in the form of government of the municipality.⁹⁵ Some statutes relating to cities which have adopted the commission form of government do not purport to increase or extend the powers of such cities, in dealing with the revenues thereof, beyond the limitations prescribed by other statutes.⁹⁶

On forfeiture of charter or dissolution of corporation. The debts and contracts of a municipality,⁹⁷ as well as liens and encumbrances on its property⁹⁸ and all existing legal remedies for their enforcement,⁹⁹ remain after its dissolution, and sometimes statutory provision is made for their enforcement,¹ the legislature being expressly required by some constitutional provisions to make provision for the protection of the creditors of an abolished municipal corporation.² While at law the creditor of a dissolved municipal corporation

Trustee

(1) Under statute authorizing trustee of disincorporated town to wind up affairs of the town and to pay its debts, trustee was given no authority to pay debts contracted by town through its mayor and council after order of disincorporation; the town's assets are a trust fund to be devoted to a specific purpose and trustee cannot use fund for any other purpose; the trustee is the only person who may encumber the assets in his hands, and his authority must be obtained from, or approved by, the court and neither parties favoring disincorporation nor parties opposing disincorporation may encumber such assets.—Darrow v. Van Buskirk, 110 P.2d 216, 51 Ariz. 1.

(2) A trustee appointed by county authorities pursuant to statute to wind up the affairs of a dissolved municipality is not in a position analogous to a receiver appointed by a court of equity.—Town of South Tucson v. Board of Sup'rs of Pima County, 84 P.2d 581, 52 Ariz. 575.

The constitutional provision prohibiting the legislature from abolishing a municipality without making provision for payment of its

is without remedy,³ except as specially provided by statute,⁴ a court of equity will afford relief⁵ by taking possession of the property of the dissolved corporation for the benefit of its creditors⁶ and enforcing against it liens and encumbrances which survive the corporation.⁷

§ 1844. Expenditures beyond Corporate Limits

A municipal corporation may in a proper case make expenditures for purposes beyond its corporate limits; but it may not do so where it is under no obligation to make and derives no benefit from the expenditure involved.

The power of a municipal corporation to make expenditures for corporate purposes is ordinarily not limited to expenditures within its corporate limits.⁸ However, expenditure of municipal funds for purposes beyond the corporate limits is unlawful where the municipality is under no obligation to make, and derives no benefit from, the expenditure.⁹ A municipal corporation has no authority to expend corporate funds to operate a ferry outside of its corporate limits for the purpose of promoting and stimulating trade and business;¹⁰ it cannot lawfully agree to compensate a sexton of a cemetery situated beyond the corporate limits and not owned by it;¹¹ and a statute providing that the board of trustees of a village may provide for the public inspection and parade of the fire department at an annual expense does not authorize the board of trustees to appropriate money for the purpose of enabling the fire department to participate in a parade held outside the village limits.¹²

§ 1845. Other Matters

Various expenditures have been held to come within or go beyond the powers of municipal corporations with respect to making expenditures or incurring indebtedness.

In addition to the purposes mentioned supra §§ 1835-1844, and in accordance with the rules therein discussed, it has been variously held that a municipal corporation may appropriate money or incur indebtedness for the development of natural municipal resources for manufacturing purposes;¹³ enforcement of a liquor law;¹⁴ the establishing and conducting of liquor dispensaries;¹⁵ collection and disposal of garbage;¹⁶ making a survey of a sewage problem;¹⁷ the necessary purchase of real property;¹⁸ the erection or construction of a memorial to soldiers and sailors;¹⁹ the purchase of a portrait as part of furnishing of council room;²⁰ advertising the city;²¹ abatement of a public nuisance;²² conducting radio broadcasts for the interest of the listening public;²³ maintenance and debts could not be construed as authorizing a tax levy to service bonds and coupons issued by a city on properties improperly sought to be included within municipal limits by statutes declared unconstitutional after issuance of bonds.—Richmond v. Town of Largo, 19 So.2d 791, 155 Fla. 226.

operation of a zoölogical garden;²⁴ the conduct of a primary election;²⁵ and the payment of the expense of a bond issue and sale,²⁶ or such minor expenses as are necessary to make common lands rentable.²⁷ Also, a statute providing that, on the creation by popular vote of antisaloon territory, unearned license fees shall be returned is not invalid as compelling a municipality to incur a debt;²⁸ and a statute making the municipality holding a local option election defendant in a contest thereof is not void as requiring it to expend public money for a private purpose,²⁹ since the only expenditure, if any, devolved on it is payment of costs.³⁰

On the other hand, it has been held that it is beyond the power of a municipality to appropriate funds or incur indebtedness for the purpose of having scrip engraved;³¹ paying for advertisements published in newspapers not designated as official;³² advertising the city;³³ purchasing works of art created by local talent;³⁴ defraying the expense of imprisoning persons charged with felonies;³⁵ aiding in national, state, and local defense;³⁶ assisting in the maintenance of the National Guard of the state;³⁷ or aiding individuals who have sustained property losses from fire.³⁸ It has been held that, as against a judgment creditor of the municipality, the council is without authority to appropriate money to pay interest on municipal bonds and accounts as an item of expenditure for the administration of governmental purposes.³⁹

Membership in municipal association or league.

Although it has been held that it is beyond the power of a municipality to appropriate funds or incur indebtedness for the purpose of paying dues to, or contributing to the maintenance of, an organization of the municipalities of the state,⁴⁰ it has been stated that the trend of modern judicial opinion is to the contrary,⁴¹ and the expenditure of municipal funds for the payment of its dues as a member of a municipal league has been held to be permissible as expenditure for a public purpose,⁴² and not to be prohibited by constitutional prohibitions against giving or loaning credit or making donations to any private individual or association.⁴³ Of course, if a municipal league fails to adhere to the purposes for which it purportedly exists and which justify the expenditure of municipal funds for membership therein, continued membership therein would no longer be for a public purpose and the expenditure would be unlawful.⁴⁴

It has been held that a municipality may lawfully provide for payment of the necessary expenses of
